THE WAVES.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY E. NORMAN GUNNISON.

"What are the wild waves saying?
The waves that murmur and fret,
And talk in their sorrowful voices
With an undertone of regret,
Telling of storm and sorrow,
Of a ship that went down at sea.
Mother, I hear the waters
Talking, talking to me."

"Daughter, the wild waves dashing,
Dashing out in the bay,
Speak of no storm or shipwreck—
Dimpling, they smile to-day.
Tales of the far-off islands,
Framed in a Summer sea—
Daughter, these are the stories
Ocean is telling to thee."

"Mother, a ship is drifting,
Drifting, silent and dark—
Wave-washed, with hull dismantled,
Rudderless floats the bark.
Not on a tropic ocean:
Up through the gates of the Sound
Bears she silently onward,
Shipwrecked, and homeward bound."

"Daughter, cease from your fancies—
There is no drifting ship;
Ocean is smiling in beauty,
Bring back the smile to your lip.
O'er the bright sheen of the waters
Summer her flag has unfurled,
Beauty walks forth where the foam-crests
Into the white spay are curled.

"He is afar in the tropics;
Toiling, he thinks of the day
When, with the long voyage ended,
He will sail into the bay—
Thinking of you, of his darling,
Waiting the clasp to your breast,
Knowing that after his labors
He may be sure of his rest.

"Spices and gems from the islands,
Shells from the bright tropic-sands,
Gathers he, hoping to place them
Safe in the clasp of your hands.
There is no wreck on the water,
Ocean is dimpled with peace;
Stay your wild fancies, and let them
Cease as the white-caps shall cease."

"Mother, the tropical islands,
Islands of perfume and palm,
Glow in the light of the sunset,
Flushed with an infinite calm.
Swarthy-faced Islanders, sporting,
Dash through the surf of the sea—
What are the palm trees and orange,
What is the beauty to me?

"Long have his white sails departed,
Waiting his bark o'er the foam,
Vainly I watch for his coming,
This is his haven—his home.
Why, when the flush of the sunset
Opens a pathway of gold,
Gleams not his sails in the distance,
Resting fold upon fold?"

"No! I shall watch for him vainly!
Watch for the gleam of his sail,
Catching no glimpse of his coming,
Seeing no speck on the gale.
Storm-tossed and battered and sailless
Floats his bark over the sea;
Never a breath from the islands
Brings my lost lover to me—

"Brings him to fold me and hold me
Safe to him, tender and true.
What is my watching and waiting,
What is my longing, to you?
You have lived life with your lover,
Nurtured his babes at your breast;
This is enough—let me mourn him,
Seek not to chide me to rest!

"Ocean, O cruel Old Ocean!
Tearing with white teeth the shore
Smiling in treacherous beauty,
Bring me my lover once more!
Dark is his hair as the midnight,
Dainty his teeth as the pearl,
Red are his lips as the coral,
Framing the mouth of a girl.

"Manly he is, and his strong arm
Only uplifted for right.
Bring me my lover, O Ocean!
Ere the dark coming of night!
Let me but look on his features,
Give me one clasp of his hand!
What do I care for earth's beauty?
What for the ocean or land?"

Slowly a billow is swelling,
Bearing a form on its crest—
'Tis but a shape of the sea-weed
Tossed on the pitiless breast.
Nearer and nearer it comes,
Nearer, with merciless glide—
Surely it holds in its keeping
Something the waters might hide.

Half that life, darkly and death-like,
Face yet untouched by decay,
Tossed but of late from the lost ship,
Drifting up into the bay.
Ripples the wave for a moment,
Murmuring coyly and sweet,
Plays with its burden—then lays it
Quietly down at her feet.

White-faced and pallid, two women
Bend o'er a cold forehead fair,
Then rings a shriek like a death-cry
Shuddering out on the air.
Only one standeth there—a mother:
Well has the wing'd arrow sped.
Darkness drifts over the waters—
She is alone with her dead.

CHAPTER VI.
IN BANKRUPTCY.

Three years subsequently to the preceding incidents, George was seated in his little Summer-house within the garden attached to his Summer residence. It was located in a district of the Seine and Marne, at Champs—a hamlet placed on top of a gentle hill, concerning which we had through a shady roadway, ascending upon a moderate incline, and bordered with green hedges, wherein the wagtails built their nests without fear of passers-by. Surrounded by peasants' cottages were several villa residences, the inhabitants of which belonged to the talented artist of the Comedie Francaise; the other was the Summer residence of Frederick Febvre, at present Fellow of the same society. A few paces farther on was the house of La Trefailles. The gate of this latter, garnished with lattices, whereon crept the vine with clusters of luscious grapes, bore an escutcheon, emblazoned with a monogram, a G and a T interlaced, traversed diagonally by a pen. Crossing this portal, on the left you found a stable, wherein two stout, thick-set horses tramped a litter of fresh straw. The stable was next to the coach-house, the doors closed upon a neat coupe with a body fit for country use, accommodating four persons. To the right was the porter's lodge, and that functionary cultivated the kitchen-garden, groomed the horses, fed the poultry, and drove the carriage.

The domicile was delightful; pure white, with blinds and encrusted with roses, while flowering plants, ascending in wandering paths over the front, embellished it with a gorgeous bouquet, amid whose clusters hummed the many-colored fly and bumble-bee. Within, an unwonted luxury, in scrupulous good taste. All glistened, despite the shadiness produced by closed rooms, and an air of coolness prevailed notwithstanding the August sun.

Beyond was the garden, descending by a perceptible decline, outspreading its lawn of verdure, interspersed with flower beds, confined within well-trimmed borders and adorned with massive shrubbery. At the termination of the garden stood two buildings—the one a kiosk, constructed almost entirely of colored glass, fashioned in lozenge form; the other a Summer hall, furnished with a billiard table. Between these two coquettish edifices, whose first story was arranged as a covered terrace, opening upon the country, stood a little door, firmly bolted—an excess in precaution in this truly peaceable district. Should this door be opened, you would find yourself in the kitchen-garden, which inclined towards a small wood of forest trees, through which meandered a silvery stream, whose principal fault consisted in being oftentimes dry. This part of the property was but an inclosure. Fences, lined with hedge of blossoming plants, formed boundaries to its sides, but the lower end was not in this way guarded. Tall trees stifled vegetation at that point, and the fence itself was mildewed, and partially eaten away by humidity, nurtured through a persistent shade.

Providentially, the railroad passes more than a league from this charming spot, enabling it to preserve its precious rural aspect. With the exception of the howling of the night-owl, the song of the nightingale, the warbling of the black-headed linnet and of the goldfinch, no sounds are heard but the cackling of poultry, the chirping of sparrows and of titmice, and the rustling of leaves shaken by the breeze whistling through poplar branches. It was the domain of peace, an ideal realm. Inaccessible to men of letters, victims to popular sarcasms.

Through a singular reaction on the part of an individual whose universe was circumscribed to the Boulevard Montmartre, George had become enamored of this silent locality. Transplanted thither during the earlier stage of his convalescence, and comprehending full well that he was the work of time, he had surrendered himself to the care of his wife and family, and taken a permanent location at Champs, despite the wishes of Philippin, harrassing him to resume his position "in the breach." Indolent at core, George gradually distrusted his ability to leave his solitude. How prosperous was he in this home! His wife, perchance, was but a "good woman," a trifle impervious to the subtilities of art, and refractory against current sensations; still, to the solid qualities of a housekeeper, wife and mother—they had already two children—she added a spirit of contentment agreeably tempered with a caustic good humor. Moreover, his wife was personally attractive, possessing that gift, peculiar to Parisian females, of being interesting, if not distinguished, through lack of individual prominence; and withal, a thrifty manager, she put to the best possible use the fifteen thousand francs accruing from her dowry.

Eight months of the year were passed at Champs in comparative seclusion, in which some neighbors participated, among them Frederick Febvre, dining with the couple when not absent to fulfill his professional engagements. George hunted with him; neither was of much account as a sportsman; still they were amusing companions, and for George especially, as he recalled, through his comrade's conversation, reminiscences of his previous life—reminiscences contemplative, and for that reason satisfactory. At times the comedian was astonished at the placid existence led by La Trefailles.

"Why," observed he, "do you no longer work?"

"I do," responded George; "but I have changed my method. The dramatic form no longer suffices me: it is a constrained vehicle, wherein thought, under pretense of condensation, perverts and weakens itself. Analysis is impossible, and I feel myself fettered."

This was, however, but one among many excuses fabricated to extenuate his apparent indolence and to conceal disappointment at not having, at the onset, obtained that superlative success heretofore his insatiate ambition.

"Bah!" replied Febvre, "you will resume the drama despite yourself. The theatre has an irresistible attraction; once set your foot on the stage, once taste the fascinating pleasures and warm emotions of a theatrical triumph, and no human wisdom can wean thirst for further applause. You will see that it is so."

In point of fact, George had grown timid. His wife alone encouraged his abstinence from toil.

"What would you do?" said she to him. "We are in ease, beyond pressure of necessity; you bear a celebrated name; our children are handsome and affectionate. What more do you crave for?"

It is true that while speaking thus she unintentionally annoyed him. He would have preferred, in reply, to advance reasons, which he repeated on other occasions to his father-in-law and to Philippin, when urging him to assume anew his theatrical labors.

Neither were the Messieurs Lubœuf—father and son—satisfied. Avid of notoriety, they had counted upon George to extract them from obscurity. And lo! he himself had relapsed into dormancy. They considered themselves defrauded.

This disappointment constituted one of Aglae's covert pleasures. Knowing her family, she appreciated the vexation of those who, overruling her personal predilections, had ventured to compromise her happiness through a blind hunt after self-glorification.

And, in fact, although matters had proved more for the better than Aglae had anticipated at the time of her marriage, still was not this present happiness uncertain, perchance fragile? Agreeing with Febvre, yet, from a different and inmate conviction, she did not believe that George could permanently resist the fascinations of a dramatic career. Moreover, should George definitely renounce his previous profession, what great satisfaction would fall to her lot? That of remaining in a modest condition, to which one of a less upright character, of a temperament less venturesome and less enthusiastic in assumption of duty, could not adapt herself. Between her and her husband, and on her side especially, affection doubtless existed; still, in order to perpetuate love for him, such as he was, necessitated that it should partake in a manner of maternal protection; that she should be, in a measure, as his elder sister.

George's pretensions to superiority had never been admitted by her.

Unfortunately, these pretensions to greatness, to sublimity, were none the less legitimate. Neither through disposition, intelligence, nor character could this young man, sensitive, timorous and eccentric, pretend to government of his wife. With an undecided moral sentiment, he appeared, in his convictions, at one time enthusiastic and at another vacillating, to have but arbitrary and unstable notions as to regards right and wrong. Now, then, could she love to fanaticism a man whose poetical fancies—to say the least—did not inspire her with respect and esteem? Where in him was the husband? Where the father? Where the master?

His little children seemed rather objects of his curiosity. When not regarding them with profound indifference, he examined them as through a lens, seemingly as if he sought to see "what was within." He said: "It thinks, therefore is exists," and making parade of a scientific knowledge freshly ground out—taking rank, to speak freely, with reading of the principles of physiology—he explains, like a professor, a mechanism he imagines to comprehend, while delivering a lecture over his little infants.

Proud and affectedly grave, he discovers infancy after the manner of those Columbuses who, having read at a late stage in life the elements of primary education, discover Batignolles, where they go in ecstacies over the discovery of proportional triangles. His listeners may well say: "Enough, we know all that." No! As if he had just learned the science, he desires it to be unknown to others heretofore. Nothing to him is mysterious; he knows everything, can explain everything—heaven, the creation, the life to come, and children thrown into the bargain.

When he finishes his discourses, Aglae, taking her babes, and pressing them, almost at risk of suffocation, to the bosom which had nurtured them, murmurs: "A lot rise, with tear-drops in her eyes:

"Poor little ones!"

Alas! could all these matters be undone! If, mistress of her judgment, they had bestowed upon her choice between this "great man" and the corner grocer, she would have preferred the humble tradesman! He might, perchance, have been beneath her in social rank and unable to excite her love; still, at least, ingenuous and narrow-minded, the shop closed, the newspaper discarded, he would have doted upon her children, without coolly dissecting them like a pretentious idiot. Fortunately—it must be repeated—Aglae believed in the religion of duty. George was her husband, and it was enough for her to know him as such. The reckless fellow monopolized all pleasures; he risked nothing with her, whose primordial quality was unalterable fondness.

The day upon which we find him seated in his garden kiosk, reading a scientific volume he imagined to comprehend, a ring came at the outer gate. A man of fifty years of age, with sharp face and careworn cast of countenance, solicited permission to converse with Monsieur La Trefailles. He presented his card to the porter, and, without standing upon ceremony, followed in his footsteps. The card was inscribed: "Francis Flourquinet, manager of the Theatre Jouffroy." George's heart beat upon reading this name in black lines. They came at last to seek him! Does the theatrical world, through scarcity in talent, experience necessity for soliciting his assistance? He found himself in presence of the impresario, who, saluting him with a sad smile, had entered the kiosk and assumed a seat, awaiting departure of the attendant before opening the conversation. Assured of being alone with George, the manager broached allusion to the cause for the interview.

"My dear fellow," said he, "I come to request a favor, a very great favor; and did you but know the immense pains I have taken with your introductions to the public, you would not refuse me, cost what it may." Upon a movement from George, he added warmly: "It does not concern money."

"Speak," observed La Trefailles.

Flourquinet wiped his brow, appeared to meditate, and continued in an altered tone of voice:

"My friend, I have had two bad seasons, and stand upon the verge of bankruptcy. Like many others, you doubtless consider this to be a slight accident in a theatrical manager's career. However, through lack of great experience, I cannot endorse that idea. If I must stop payment, I will be forced to that disgrace."

"Why so?"

"I have touched bottom."

"Eh?" ejaculated George with a start.

Flourquinet looked at him; then, as if with a view of excusing a design which, in the eyes of the world to which he belonged, might pass for an eccentricity:

"It is because I have been a soldier," he said briefly.

"Come, come," rejoined George, troubled despite himself; "what can I do to avert your danger?"

"You can, in truth, avert the danger through granting me permission to reproduce 'The Old Folks,' not played for over five years, and in loaning yourself to a step insuring success."

"What step?"

"Hang it! it is hard; yet ponder well before consenting. But I am at my wit's end, and, despite repugnance, address myself to your generosity, believing myself obligated to recall from no scruple in order to prevent ruin of those placing confidence in me."

"Out with it, then!"

"Well, then, here it is——"

Although apparently determined, the unfortunate man could not proceed. His throat seemed parched, his hands twitched nervously, and a shudder ran over his limbs.

George had compassion on him, although rarely susceptible of sympathy for another's trouble through excess of individual sensitiveness.

"It is necessary," resumed Flourquinet, making an effort to play his final card—"it is necessary to induce Rose to play the leading part."

He ceased speaking, awaiting his fate in painful anxiety. Everything in his case depended upon George's answer. Should he consent to lend his influence, success was certain; the Winter season, commencing brilliantly, would afford time for recuperation. Should George refuse, the struggle ended.

"She then declines?" inquired the latter.

"She declines," responded Flourquinet.

"Why and wherefore?"

The manager did not anticipate this question. Judging from knowledge of the past, could it not be understood that Rose should endeavor to avoid commingling amid the affairs of a man whose mistress she was publicly known to have been? And none the less publicly had he abandoned her, and, consequently, could she appear before the world as seeking a pretext for reconciliation?

THE LATE RUSSELL GIRARD, GROTESQUE DANCER.

To perform the part, perchance, would have been a work of no moment, did it not necessitate obligatory relations at rehearsals, for it must be repeated that, "The Old Folks" not being first produced at the Theatre Jouffroy, neither the scenery nor company of that house was adapted to it. Consequently, she would be compelled to receive the author and to converse with him upon a footing of intimacy revolting to the young woman.

To see him again involved, moreover, a heavy sacrifice on her part, as she conceived herself to have been the cause of the duel wherein George had succumbed. Still, what would be the inevitable suspicion with respect to such a reconciliation, both at the theatre and with the world outside? Would it not suggest an intention on her part to alienate George from his household, to wean away his affections from a wife, mother of his two children?

Perceiving George pacing the dining-room, even to the porter's lodge, was a general exclamation:

"We are saved!"

"Ah, the thrice fortunate Flourquinet!" enviously murmured those who had treated him as a hypocrite and swindler.

"Sold—a streak of luck!"

"What a money maker!"

"A good fellow, nevertheless!"

When Christopher Columbus first discovered land, none could have congratulated him more warmly.

On the morrow rehearsals were commenced. La Trefailles was the recipient of an ovation. Wherever he appeared actors, prompters, machinists, all pressed to grasp his hand, with smiles upon their lips. He was their real, their literal preserver. What genius! and "The Old Folks!" what a piece!

Curiosity prevailed to remark the countenances preserved by Rose and George in presence of each other. It was disappointed, nevertheless satisfied. They simply greeted each other with a friendly grasp of the hand, conversing as ordinary acquaintances.

"People of pluck!" remarked everybody.

Still the spectators were ignorant as to their having met on the previous evening. This dignified interview, in presence of Flourquinet, had given none to the impression.

The sole individual apparently out of place was Philippin. The general idea was that he would abstain from being present. When his arrival was remarked, it was suspected that he came as a spy on his brother-in-law. A pause ensued; general hilarity stalks at their doors, starvation menaces them; and, bound by engagements, no resources present themselves elsewhere. They are bound to this enterprise, whose good or ill luck—they are all superstitious—is unconscious of their fate.

As the manager passes along, a severe and chilling silence prevails. Upon the stage, in the lobbies, all is desolation. Rehearsal is suspended. What is to happen? People with unfamiliar countenances are, with closed doors, within the private office. They are business men. They speak in a loud tone of voice. There is an inkling of bankruptcy. The worthy Flourquinet, heretofore respected and esteemed by all about him, felt himself an object of distrust, of aversion, latent yet perceptible; moreover, amid the most subservient of his employes were some exhibiting ill-temper—a musician, gasman, a property boy. The words "bad faith" dropped from their lips, and the poor man dare not pull the ears of the offenders through fear of irritating those who, to all appearance, would treat—such being the fate of the unsuccessful—him with contumely, as the ill-disposed constrain themselves until afforded a pretext for annoyance.

One evening, during a performance to an empty house, despite a deluge of free tickets, Flourquinet crossed the stage. He was scarcely recognizable. Clean-shaved, his hat poised on one side, he appeared making an inspection like a conqueror. He uttered some criticisms upon the performance, gave a couple of orders, and, perceiving an actor who had proposed to throw up his part before the raising of the curtain:

"You, sir," he said, "I wish to talk with you. Come to my office."

"He has a new piece!" ejaculated the actors.

"Bah!" muttered the skeptical among them. "He is putting on airs. What new thing can we have? He has not a solitary fresh play in his repository."

"Perhaps the stockholders have come to his aid."

Nevertheless, the style of the manager electrified his company; rebirth of hope restores suspended animation.

Flourquinet continued his inspection, and, upon its termination, entered his office. Three authors awaited him. They were of the tribe of "saviors," people slightly discomforted, "who have not had a chance," or who, through dint of persistance, only happen to have their pieces acted upon emergencies. The manager of a tottering theatre in nowise affrights them; to him they ever apply.

"My kind friends," quoth Flourquinet, "I must request you to return to-morrow; this evening I am engaged." Then, turning to his rebellious performer: "You would throw up your part, would you?" said he. "Why? Because I owe you two months' salary? Is it sensible thus to act? How can you expect me to pay you, simpleton, when you refuse affording me assistance to draw a house? Moreover, if you be not satisfied, here is your agreement; shall I tear it up?"

The man, bashful as a whipped schoolboy, maintained silence.

"I beg your pardon, Monsieur Flourquinet," he replied, after a pause; "I did not think of that. I will play the part. Still, it is only because, you see——"

"What?"

The actor hesitated; then, turning upon his heel:

"No!" said he with an effort. "I will play the part, that's all!"

"You are in very great straits?" inquired Flourquinet kindly.

"Ah, hang it!" observed the actor. "The worse is the humiliation. My little girl has been turned out of school."

"Stay," rejoined the manager quickly; "here are one hundred francs on account, my old fellow."

The actor was incredulous, although the money was in his hand.

"One hundred francs! Have you fallen heir to an estate?"

"Now, go, go!" quoth the manager. "A change has come. Now, hurry and tell the stage-manager that I am awaiting him."

The actor performed his commission, and within ten minutes all the house, from leading star to call-boy, knew that Flourquinet had given him one hundred francs. To all it was evident that salvation was at hand. There was no end to spreading the glad tidings that rejoiced those overgrown children, whose sorrows, faults, vices even, melt away, thanks to a candor and good-heartedness nowhere else to be found in a like degree. When the stage-manager quitted Flourquinet, after being closeted with him a length of time, he emerged with eyes beaming triumphantly.

"Well?" was inquired of him on all sides.

He pointed to a sheet of paper held in his hands; it was the distribution of parts to be posted in the greenroom.

"The Old Folks!" ejaculated the actors enthusiastically.

"Am I in it?" inquired each one, taking turns and leaning upon the stage-manager's shoulder.

Inexplicably, throughout all the dining-rooms

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

W. F. B., Wilmington, N. C.—"Poker. A is dealing, and it is B's blind. C and D come in. A raises the blind with three aces in his hand. B raises back with three queens. C and D pass out. A stands the raise. They draw cards. It is B's age. A bets $1; B raises it $3. A calls the hand. B says 'A full hand!' A says 'that is good,' showing three fives; and as B rakes the money in A throws down his steer two cards, and finds that he has overlooked his hand, he having three aces and a pair of queens. B having three fours and a pair of kings. A claims the money."……Having pronounced B's hand good, A loses the money. Had it come to a show of cards, without any such acknowledgment on the part of B, the latter would have won.

A READER, St. Louis.—"There having been some dispute between myself and a Chicago party as to who claims the championship of the West between the two rival clubs, the Chicago Whites and the St. Louis Browns, you will oblige the St. Louis boys in general by explaining in your next why the St. Louis Browns claim the championship of the West for 1877."……The question is not one of club vs. club, but as between the four Western clubs in their League-pennant contests together; and the record of these games shows that the Chicago Club has won the championship by winning the most games and having the fewest defeats. Bets should be governed by this view of the question, unless they were made on the success of one club against the other in their games together.

D. and H., Washington.—"For your decision of a bet resulting from the following conversation, which is given verbatim: D.—Are there two 7's in 14 fulfilled? E.—No, only one. E. D.—Are there two 1's in fulfill? D.—There is and there isn't. H.—Are there two 7's in fulfill? E.—Authority will save. We'll leave it to any authority you please. D.—All right. I'll bet you there aint. Who wins?"……D loses. He in all likelihood meant to say that there were two 7's in fourteen; and even as to that he could not have won, for "there is and there isn't," accordingly as Webster or as Worcester is taken for an authority.

CRICKET, Binghamton.—"A is on third base, B at the bat, and strikes a foul bound to pitcher; A runs on bit, pitcher endeavors to cut off runner, but runner returns to third; pitcher fields ball to third, which is not held. Can runner score? Is not play considered as suspended until such time as the runner shall have reached the base that he had just left? Is not the runner obliged to remain on the base until such time as the pitcher holds the ball again, because the ball was not in play until the runner reached third?"……The rule says no base shall be run, or run secured, on a foul ball. The ball is in play after the pitcher holds it.

G. E., Chicago.—"1. What is the exact distance between New York and San Francisco; also between New York and Chicago? 2. Where and also what is the size of the Great Eastern? 3. What is the size of Queen Victoria's diamond, and its value?"……1. By rail, about 3,306 miles; by steamship the shortest is about 930 miles. 2. Rotting in English waters. Length, 692ft.; beam, 83ft. 3. Of her several diamonds, you probably mean the Koh-i-noor. The price cannot be fixed, as it would depend upon the demand for it were it ever offered for sale. It has been reduced in weight from 800 carats to 102¼, it having been last cut in 1862.

CHESS, Garrettsville.—1. There is no such book published. 2. Besides the mere amount of money necessary to bill and advertise in the first town where you might perform, you should have a sinking fund to draw on in case your business at first should not prove remunerative—say $1,000. 3. In some States you have to take out a State, county and a city license. 4. Josie Mansfield is reported to have been in this country within the past year; but she never lectured anywhere.

J. M. P.—"Did Samuel J. Tilden equip and arm soldiers at his own expense during the war? If so, how many?"……Were we to begin to investigate the stories set afloat by partisan newspapers in the heat of a Presidential campaign, we should have no time for anything else. Samuel J. Tilden was at the head of a committee that sent many men into the field from this State, and it is quite probable that he contributed as much money for the purpose as anyone else on the committee or in that town.

DANIEL KELLY.—1. Hi Horton did not run 100 yards in as quick time as 9¾ seconds, which is the best on record. 2. The best amateur time for the distance is 10¾ seconds, made by W. F. Baxter on a private course in England, and by M. E. Burris of the N. Y. A. C., in this country. 3. On March 13, 1854, Wm. Barlow (Freestone) beat Horton in a one-mile race at Union Course, L. I. 4. The first issue of THE CLIPPER was dated April 30, 1853.

R.—1. Aware that it was the property of another, he would have no moral right to sing the song. His legal right would depend upon whether or not the author had availed himself of the protection which the copyright law gives to authorship. 2. His legal right to occupy such a stand is questionable; but he should make it so warm for him as to render such occupancy both unprofitable and vexatious.

NEW B., Boston.—1. Sol Smith Russell made his first appearance on the stage in Jacksonville, Ill., in July, 1860, with a traveling dramatic company. It has been published that he was born June 15, 1848, which may be a mistake in 1845. 2. The two men mentioned in comparison made, as Mr. Russell is a partner in the business with the troupe he travels with, and the other person named receives a salary.

J. B. C., Norfolk.—The recent international centennial long-range match at Creedmoor, L. I., was shot in accordance with the regulations adopted by the National Rifle Association, telescopic, magnifying and such front sights as may be used by bunting parties, a bull's-eye in the centre, which covered the target so as to conceal the danger signal when displayed, being prohibited.

J. M., Paterson.—"Cassino. To make out of hand a six, by putting a deuce on a four; B sitting places as ace on the six and makes it seven. A says that B must say he makes it seven. B says that the simple fact of his placing an ace on A's six makes it seven, and it is not necessary for him to say one word."……B must announce his play, as otherwise A can separate the cards.

CHIEF ENGR., Chicago.—The longest recorded P. R. battle was between Australian Kelly and Jonathan Smith, it lasting 6 hours and 15 minutes. They "loafed" much of the time. 2. Consult a lawyer, or wait until the trust takes place. 3. The Show in the Garden, which would have been against the rules. 4. Ed. James' Book of Rules is the only obtainable work containing the rules of the P. R.

MAIN, Philadelphia.—"Your question, which you plead would, depend upon its weight. 2. It depends entirely upon the style of the handwriting how many sheets of foolscap would be required for a five-act play. 3. A 'distinguished star' would not be required to take time to read a drama written by an unknown and untried author.

MUGGINS, Galesburg.—1. The referee's decision entitles him to the position. 2. Do not consider it worth while to risk personal property. 3. Brief accounts of such events are acceptable. 4. Heenan, who fought Sayers, died in October, 1873. 5. Miss Lydia Thompson and troupe have been performing in Britain for a long time past.

TWO P. M.—It is not possible for us to answer such a question. The stain may be of such a nature as to be ineradicable, and we have not time to experiment with the sample sent. For about one dollar you can purchase, say of Dick & Fitzgerald, a book of one thousand or so of different recipes, which will be very useful about the house.

S. M.—"In regard to two excursion boats on the East River, the Osseo and the Flora, I claim the first is the smallest boat—excursion or passenger—on the river; my friend that the latter boat is."……The Flora is the smallest boat in the employ of the Metropolitan Steamboat Company, and is used for excursion purposes only. The Osseo is a tug, and is employed in towing vessels in and out of the harbor.

J. C., Paterson.—The meeting held at Joe Coreless' Old House at Home, Paterson, N. J., for the purpose of agreeing upon a final stakeholder in the match between Mace and O'Baldwin, final place on April 5, 1876. Baldwin was represented by Mart. Killacky and Arthur Mallen, and Mace was present in person.

JAMES, Chicago.—1. It is both. What you see in daily use is the bark of the cork-tree. 2. Of course, if the score was 2 to 1, A, who bet that the Stars would win by 5 to 1, loses.

MULDOON.—"I bet Mc. $1 even that America makes the highest individual score in the International Rifle Match. The highest individual score made was by America and by Ireland, 228." So what?"……You lose, on this statement.

J. F.—Casino. There are a 3 and a 2 on the board. A puts a 4 on the 3 and makes seven. Then B puts an ace on the 2, and puts them all on A's seven and calls it ten. Can B do it?"……Yes.

SUBSCRIBER, Lowell.—"Block game of dominoes. When the game is blocked the count is even. D put down. B takes the down next. D will not give it."……It is B's "down," or next set.

POKER-PLAYER.—"At a recent poker-party it was claimed that a king, ace, deuce, trey and four constitute a 'straight,' and the money was laid aside subject to your decision."……Deuce and king cannot figure together in a straight.

W. M. C.—1. Miss Rose Wood in private life is Mrs. Lewis Morrison. 2. There is but one way to insure success upon the dramatic stage, and that is to commence at the lowest round of the ladder and work your way up.

M. O'B., Fredericksburg.—We have no knowledge of the whereabouts of "Col." O'Brien. Perhaps some of our readers may be able to locate him, and thus relieve the mind of his mother.

REPLEVIN, Louisville.—Dick Garnella does not turn a double somerset without assistance. His brother aids him materially when he leaps into the air, and without that assistance he could not perform the feat.

CONSTANT READER.—As we keep no record of the receipts of money by stars, we cannot tell you how much money Barry Sullivan received during the first week of his engagement in San Francisco, Cal.

CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER.—The habits you speak of prove detrimental to the foundation of a good vocal organ. An instrumental accompaniment will be of considerable advantage.

A. S.—Pike's Opera-house was opened to the public for the first time Jan. 9, 1868, with a performance by "Favorite," by the Brignoli and La Grange Italian-opera Troupe.

F. M.—In the final shot by the American side in the international match at Creedmoor, L. I., in 1874, Col. Bodine made four points, which was all a bull's-eye counted in that match.

CONSTANT READER, St. Louis.—1. There is no firm of that name. J. L. Peters, 843 Broadway, is the only music publishing firm with a name approaching it. 2. B. W. Hitchcock, 355 3d avenue, N. Y.

JAMES GILMORE, Kent.—1. John C. Heenan died on Oct. 25, 1873, aged 39. 2. He was born at West Troy, N. Y., May 2, 1834, but New York was his place of residence at the time of his demise, though he died at the Far West.

LEVIATHAN.—Such an advertisement, in a space of fifteen lines, would cost $23.49, net cash, for thirteen insertions.

A. H., Phila.—1. None. 2. Savers did not die from the effects of his battle with Heenan. 3. No back numbers of that date left.

INSPECTOR.—He can choose his residence, but his declaration of such residence will subject him to challenge at the polls, and he is liable to lose his vote

R. D. C.—This paper has always decided that the highest scoring hand in draw poker is jack. The paper referred to used to decide that way too.

JACKSON.—We do not know where a file can be had, unless the proprietor of the Howard Athenæum, Boston, can inform you.

NORRIS CITY.—"What was the wealth of A. T. Stewart estimated at at the time of his death?"……About thirty millions by some, and a good deal more or less by others.

L. A. B., Peabody.—B wins on his low game, which goes out before what you call the five, and also before what you call pedro (the nine-spot).

DOUBLETOU, Quincy.—"Poker-dice. A throws 5 sixths, and B throws 5 aces. Which wins?"……A, if his "five sixths" were not a flush, or five of any other denomination.

SUBSCRIBER, Springfield.—"Forty-fives. A plays ace of clubs, B plays king of clubs. Both parties claim the trick, diamonds being trumps."……B, with his king, wins.

F. S., Saginaw.—"Is it a foul to kick the dead ball stops his play If he has no right to roquet or croquet a ball, he has no right to use it to carom from it through a wicket.

NO SIGNATURE, Pittsburgh.—"We never heard of the lady. She may be performing under some other name. 2. Cannot say.

L. D. S., San Francisco.—Your card will cost $2 25 for each insertion. If paid for three months (13 times) in advance, 20 per cent. off.

DAN W. EMERSON, Rock Island.—In walking 1,000 miles in 1,000 consecutive hours, the pedestrian must walk one mile, no more or less, in each and every hour.

C. O. W., Marlboro.—Four aces are the best hand at poker, unless otherwise agreed upon. A flush or royal flush is not a winning hand unless specially made so.

ARTHUR, Newark.—We have never seen any performer do a club-swinging act while he was dancing a clog-dance. We have never heard of the feat being performed.

S. E. D., Louisville.—A dog of that description would cost you about $100; but we do not make purchases for correspondents. Ed. James could probably put you one.

M. B.—"Which of the following expressions is correct?—'This apple is to be divided between you and me,' or 'between you and I.'"……The former.

J. L. JAKE.—"Please give us the highest run made on a billiard table, push, etc., counted, on a six-pocket table."……177, as a record.

BASEBALL, Guelph.—Bets on the game played and declared void are off. The new game does not affect them, unless the bets were specifically renewed.

CANCAN.—1. Karng-karng. 2. Bal-lay (French), and ball (English).

PATRICK J. P., Philadelphia.—We know nothing about such an offer to bet.

D. J. FOUR.—There is a firm entitled Hagendorf, annunciators, 119 E. 53d street, N. Y.

H. M., Brooklyn.—We prefer not to recommend any particular song-book.

CHARLES, Montreal.—The person named prefers that such matters should not be made public.

NO SIGNATURE.—We cannot say of our own knowledge that it is "the most common report so avers.

GILMOOLY.—We do not publish biographical sketches of professionals in this department.

NEW JIM, Memphis.—We do not know. Even those who pitch side curves cannot tell how they do it.

A. C. F., Le Roy.—1. Send word to Peck & Snyder, Nassau street, New York. 2. The challenging club.

C. Z. DEIST.—Dehiman, we believe, came from the Chelseas.

JOE SADLTZ, Forth Worth.—"Did Castle Garden exist in 1812?"……Yes, and for many years later.

DIETRICH VON BERN, Wilkesbarre.—B wins the game.

C. E. E., Ashtabula.—Probably because it was faulty.

JOHN.—The full score appears in this name. 2. Loses.

J. R. Keene.—See answer to "C. O. W., Keene."

G. L., Freeport.—Those numbers are out of print.

TIGER SPORT.—A loses, according to our rule.

HENRY.—Consult the Directory.

DICK-THROWER.—Five aces beat five aces.

A FIREMAN.—See answer to "A Reader."

C. K., Memphis.—We do not have the time.

F. J., Sandusky City.—We do not know.

J. S. D.—D won when he called it.

S. R. VILLA.—Cash received.

OWEN O'FLAHERTY, Phila.—Ingram wins.

J. D., Phila.—In 1869.

"The Wastes of Life."

"This dress is too long wasted;
I think it is a shame."
"No doubt of it, my darling—
My cash has been the same!"

TIME!—Precisely at the time appointed, ten minutes before 3 o'clock, on the afternoon of Sunday, Sept. 24, the little spark that was "destined to kindle a great fire," was sent on its errand into the bowels of the rocky reef at Hallett's Point, and, having accomplished the object of its mission, went out, amid the confusion and ruin which it had created. There is no need of attempting to ignore the fact that the promised explosion caused a feeling of uneasiness, if not of actual alarm, among all classes of society; and, though many affected to look upon the whole arrangement as a boy looks upon the explosion of his fire-cracker on the 4th of July, it was quite evident that there was an undercurrent at work which suggested some dire disaster. It is quite true, also, that numbers of persons left the city, in fear of an improvised earthquake! But that large class of humanity that loves excitement, that is most happy in the presence of danger, could be seen at an early hour moving towards the "infected district," so as to be on hand when the mine was fired, and to enjoy the entertainment provided for them on that gloomy Sabbath-day. The attendance was immense, the upper circles on the hillsides accommodating the largest number of spectators. Timid people uptown went to the various parks that afternoon to enjoy the beauties of nature. When "the thing" was about to be touched off there was "a breathless silence," and when the mine was fired, and but a low, rumbling noise heard, and a body of spray thrown up, there was a feeling of disappointment, and "Our Jim" declared that the show was no "great shakes," after all; but scientifically it was a splendid achievement, and at Hallett's Point we shall see "Old Times Rocks" no more.

AS WE CRUISED with seafaring men last Sabbath, to avoid danger, we had time for reflection "as we sailed, as we sailed," and we came to the sage conclusion that sailors must be "evolved" from certain small vessels, the change taking place when they're sent aboard yachts! Prof. Huxley will please take notice.

WE NEED to inform our readers that dogs are liable to receive both collars and cuffs!

TIDAL-WAVE.

Had the Hallet's-reef explosion sent a tidal wave to cover up the city of New York, we should not have been more surprised than we are at the tidal-wave of humanity which has for its objective point the American metropolis. For nearly two weeks the city has been overrun with strangers, in such extraordinarily large numbers as to defy the efforts of hotel proprietors and boarding-house keepers to provide for them, or to give them all a place of shelter. "They come not as single spies, but in battalions," and they flaunt their trunks in our faces as though they meant to stay. Accommodating as our hotel-managers are, self-sacrificing as their clerks may be, the effort to take in all that seek the shelter of their roofs is fruitless; and, with a desponding look, they sadly see the carpet-bagger going from their doors, to try the patience of some other host. No guest is refused a meal, but alas! "his lodging is on the cold ground" if he has not taken the precaution to secure a room in advance of his coming. Parlors are given up in the behoof of those who desire a temporary lodgment, and eke the halls and nooks and corners are filled with humble cots.

What has caused this great commotion? Is it owing to an upheaval of better times? Or is it one of the results of the great Centennial Exposition? Not all of one, probably; not all of the other; but a combination of the two. Our streets are swarming with the newcomers, and our marts of trade and places of amusement feel the exhilarating and profitable influence of their presence. We do not believe that many of them came purposely to see the great explosion; on the contrary, the more timid of them quietly packed their traps on Saturday night, and silently stole away, fearful that this polluted city might share the fate of the wicked habitations of old. We welcome the stranger, because he leaves with us many a ducat; and though he may cavil at the charges made upon him for his frugal fare, and use indefinite language touching the quality and tenderness of the provender provided for his sustenance, nevertheless he must remember that this is an exceptionally busy season, and that tender joints and juicy steaks do not grow on every bush. Will the rush continue? It is scarcely to be expected that the present overcrowded condition of things will last; but, more or less, the city will have its share of guests up to the close of the exhibition in Fairmount Park. We shall do our best to give them suitable quarters and entertainment, and make their stay among us pleasant and agreeable. Our many places of amusement are in full blast, one striving to surpass the other in the character and style of its performances. The stranger may lose his way in attempting to hunt up "trade marks," etc., but it is as natural for him to flow into the theatre or hall of minstrelsy and music as it is for the tide to ebb and flow in the right direction.

Jam at the Hotel.

"Waiter," he yelled with an awful roar,
"This napkin, I'm sure, has been used before."
"By four, sir, no," did the waiter say—
"You're only the third that's used it to-day!"

THE PARIS CREW of St. John lost much money by their defeat in the international regatta at Philadelphia—at least, so it was thought. It now transpires that one of the crew sold the race, and now the club is without money and without Price!

OWING to a heavy blow, up on the East River, last Sunday, all hands were called to take in a reef!

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ On Sept. 18: It was stated that the violent storm which prevailed over a great part of the Atlantic seaboard on the 17th inst. was the severest that has been felt for years, and caused much damage to property at various seaside resorts. George Hook, wife and child, Thomas A. Reese and four others lost their lives by the capsizing of a barge off Poole's Island, Md.……A dispatch stated that on the night of the 16th J. S. Mayberry, a revenue collector, was assassinated at Blound Springs, Ala.……Cable telegrams were to the effect that Dodrell Pasha had been issued the order to send 50,000 troops and 12 guns to the Turkish provinces; that among the ambassadors at Constantinople the impression prevailed that the situation was worse than now stands might be considered satisfactory, but the governments who have to decide in the last instance have not spoken yet; that a Spanish revenue cutter cap tured a four-masted schooner, the Atlantic, off Cape Bojador, but she was retaken by boats from the British man-of-war Samarang, two of the Spanish prize crew being drowned in the struggle; that the steamship Lisbon of the Allan line was greatly damaged by striking on a rock off the coast of Ireland; that it is expected that the French Government will prosecute the originators of the forged Rudolph Dreyfus letter, which has been issued in the Paris France on the 15th; that small encounters between the Turks and Persians take place daily, several frontier villages have been burned, and Kurdish outbreaks were hastily despatching troops to the scene; that an immense meeting was held at the Guildhall, London, Eng., at which an address was adopted expressing sympathy at the outrages of the Turks, and praying England no longer to support Turkey from considerations of political expediency, while an amendment expressing confidence in the Government was rejected by an overwhelming majority; that the Epoca (Madrid newspaper) alluded editorially to the fact that no extradition treaty exists between Spain and the United States, and said it knows not what judicial course is to be taken by the Spanish authorities in the case of W. M. Tweed; and that the project of an international exhibition at Berlin, Germany, in 1882 is seriously entertained.……Losses by fire: Keen McKeekin's drug-store, Elgin's store and other buildings, Mt. Sterling, Ky.; also about $118,000, partially insured; the N. Y. Manufacturing Co.'s Cotton mill, at Peterboro, N. H.—loss heavy, insured for $30,000; the tugboat Governor Curtin, at Georgetown, D. C.—loss $3,000.……It was stated that on the 18th, near Estontown, N. J., Jerome Kuporwitz shot his wife dead, and then committed suicide.……Suicides: John Miller, a wealthy farmer, by shooting, at Pauline, N. J.; Henry Lulck of Livingston, N. J., by hanging.

☞ Sept. 22: A railroad accident occurred on the Panhandle road, near Columbus, O., four passenger-cars being thrown down an embankment by the breaking of a journal. Five persons were killed, and about thirty wounded.……John Young was executed at Nashville, Tenn., for the murder of Abel Macdonald.……A shock of earthquake was experienced in portions of Massachusetts.……It was announced per cable that the plague has broken out in Smyrna, Asiatic Turkey, and the people are in a panic, and about to change their tents and huts every three days; that the proclamation of Prince Milan as King is well received by the people of Servia; that Prince Hassan and Count Ignatieff are to be the Russian military and naval envoys to the Porte; that a duel he fought with a distinguished Russian diplomatist; and that Messrs. Duguid & Co., merchants of Liverpool, Manchester and Buenos Ayres, had failed—liabilities, $600,000.……An unknown man was killed by a collision between trains near Sellersville, Pa.……A man named Oldenburgh committed suicide at Grafton, Mass.……Lawrence Rowcliffe, a wealthy resident of Lawrence, Mass., made a desperate attempt to take his life by cutting his throat.……The fall of a scaffolding in this city caused the death of Daniel Manning and serious injury to five others.……Losses by fire: Moluska, Craig & Co.'s furniture factory, Chicago, Ill.—loss, $55,000, partially insured; Rosendale & Co.'s furniture warerooms, Baltimore, Md.—loss very heavy; Emerton's store and several dwellings, at Goodwin's Mills, Lyman, Mass.—loss $7,500, insurance $5,000.

☞ Sept. 23: John J. Slattery and Michael Doolin, members of the Molly Maguire Association, were convicted at Pottsville, Pa., of conspiracy to murder William and Jesse Major.……Dispatches from abroad were to the effect that the order to send 50,000 troops and 12 guns to the Turkish provinces was withdrawn on an arrangement between the Spanish and United States Governments, and that they will be sent to New York on board the steamer Franklin, which is expected to sail from Gibraltar to Vigo, Spain, to take Tweed on board, for delivery to the American authorities; that the armistice had been broken by the Turks, and that the Russians have had captured Massowah and two Egyptian steamers; that during the past three months the clergy and aristocracy have made a severe attack upon their religious and secular privileges, which have led to the demand by the solemn protest against the Turkish conditions for peace; that difficulty had arisen because the Porte, before granting an extension of the armistice, would insist that the national loan for the benefit of the island of Cuba is probably a failure, it having come to light that the customs revenues were long ago mortgaged to the Spanish bank (the Bank of the Government).……Suicide: Jacob Gerdiman, Cross & Co.'s flouring mill, at Prescott, Wis.—loss $30,000, insured for $19,000; W. W. Thomas' barn at New Haven, and Hallett's Reef, in Long Island Sound.

☞ Sept. 21: It was cabled that Wm. M. Tweed had been embarked at Cornuna, Spain, for Cuba, to be surrendered on his arrival there to the United States officers; that one thousand Spanish troops had also sailed for Cuba; that communications exchanged at an interview between the Duc Decazes and the Turkish Ambassador at Paris served to show how entirely opposed are the views of the powers essential; that the Porte will prolong the armistice if Russia stops sending officers and soldiers to Belgrade; and that the Spanish Government has approved the conduct of the Prefect of Valladolid, who forbade the sale of the Protestant Bible in the streets of that place.……Four of the Northfield (Minn.) Bank robbers were captured near Madelia, after one of them had been killed and the others wounded, two of them—said to be the Younger brothers—fatally, it was believed.……Losses by fire: Keen McKeekin's drug-store, Elgin's store and other buildings, Mt. Sterling, Ky.; also about $118,000, partially insured; the N. Y. Manufacturing Co.'s Cotton mill, at Peterboro, N. H.—loss heavy, insured for $30,000; the tugboat Governor Curtin, at Georgetown, D. C.—loss $3,000.……It was stated that on the 18th, near Estontown, N. J., Jerome Kuporwitz shot his wife dead, and then committed suicide.……Suicides: John Miller, a wealthy farmer, by shooting, at Pauline, N. J.; Henry Lulck of Livingston, N. J., by hanging.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Weekly Record of the Decease of Prominent Individuals.

COMPILED EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

ARDMILLAN, Lord—Of the Scottish High Court of Sessions. Born in 1805, admitted to the bar in 1829, and raised to the bench in 1855—Scotland, Aug. 5.

ASPINWALL, Julia—Wife of Rev. A. J. Aspinwall—Harrington, N. H., Sept. 20, aged 34.

BOOTH, Eliza T.—Wife of William D. Booth of this city, and daughter of the late Hon. C. B. Hubbell of Bridgeport, Conn.—Sept. 22.

BABCOCK, Hon. George R.—For a long time identified with the business interests of Buffalo, N. Y. He joined the Republican Party upon its formation, and was temporary chairman of the State Convention held at Saratoga in 1855, wherein E. D. Morgan presented his name as a candidate in nomination for the office of State Comptroller, it being withdrawn at Mr. Babcock's own request. At the last session of the Legislature he was placed on the State-prison Investigating Committee, and, when his fatal illness seized him, he was engaged in scrutinizing the management of the Clinton Prison.……He represented a portion of Erie County in the Assembly in 1843, and from 1850 to 1853 was a member of the State Senate—Dannemore, Clinton County, N. Y., Sept. 22.

BAKER, Wm. D.—Member of the Philadelphia bar, and during a long career connected, either as proprietor or as editor, with The Temperance Gazette, the late William E. Burton's Gentleman's Magazine, The American Sentinel, The American Advocate, The Daily Sun and The Evening Journal. At one time he was Solicitor of the county of Philadelphia, and Gov. Pollock appointed him Inspector of Banks—Phila., Sept. 17, aged 63.

CARRERA, Ramon—Count de Morella, a famous Carlist. In revenge for the murder of his mother and three sisters by the Christinos, he laid waste Arragon, Valencia, and Andalusia. In 1840, the Carlists having been defeated, he fled to France, and there married a Miss Richards, an Englishwoman, who so curbed his martial spirit that in 1854 he declined to hearken to the call of Don Carlos, who summoned him to his assistance—recently, aged 66.

CHALMERS, Mrs. Agnes—Relict of James Chalmers of this city—Presbyterian—Home, N. Y., Sept. 17, aged 83.

CROSBY, John P.—Grandnephew of Col. Henry Rutgers of this city, and brother of Chancellor Howard Crosby. He was born in the old Rutgers mansion, in the Seventh Ward of this city, and graduated from Columbia College in the class of 1817. Studying law, he was at first associated with B. F. Blatchford (a son of Judge Blatchford), with B. F. Marbury, then with the firm of Crosby, Ostrander & Jones, next with that of Ostrander & Jones, and finally with that of Crosby, Hoffman & Crosby, of which leading member he died—also a member of the Bar Association, at the time of his death. Drowned while bathing—Fire Island, Atlantic Ocean, Sept. 19, aged 66.

DAVIES, Prof Charles—Eminent mathematician. Born in Washington, Ct., but while a young man removed to this State, and worked on a farm until appointed to a cadetship at West Point in 1815. Graduating in 1815, he received the brevet rank of second lieutenant of Light Artillery and subsequently was transferred to the Engineer Corps as second lieutenant, a position he resigned. In 1823 he became Principal Assistant-professor of Mathematics at West Point. In 1831 he became Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, and in 1833 Professor of Mathematics, which he continued to be until 1837, when he resigned in order that he might devote himself to the long series of mathematical works of which he subsequently became the author, and upon the publication of which he relied. In 1839 he accepted the Professorship of Mathematics offered him by Trinity College, Hartford, Ct., and held it until 1841, when he returned to West Point as one of the Board of Visitors, being reappointed to the army, when the rank of major, he served as paymaster at West Point until 1845, and in the interim was also treasurer of the West Point Academy. From 1857 to 1865 he was professor at Columbia College, this city—Fishkill Landing, N. Y., Sept. 17, aged 78.

DALGOUKOWKI, Prince—Killed in a duel fought with a distinguished Russian diplomat—Europe, about Sept. 21.

DODGE, Dr. Nehemiah—New London, Ct., Sept. 23, aged 76.

DRAPER, Rev. Geo. B., D. D.—Rector of St. Andrew's Church, this city—here, Sept. 24, aged 49.

GUILD, Joseph H.—Organist of Holy Trinity Church, this city—here, Sept. 20, aged 35.

HAWKINS, Capt. Samuel—Mariners' Harbor, N. Y., Sept. 19, aged 49.

HOWARD, Rev. W. D.—Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, Pa. He had been connected with it for over twenty-five years—that city, Sept. 23.

HAWORTH, Rev. Henry—Rector of St. George's Church, Hanover square, London, had been appointed to that church a year before. It was there that he officiated at all the fashionable weddings took place—London, about Sept. 2.

JANES, Rev. Edmund Storer, D.D.—Known as the "Working Bishop," and senior head of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. Born in Sheffield, Mass., April 27, 1807. When he was four years old his parents removed to Salisbury, Ct. From 1824 to 1830 he was engaged in teaching, and at the same time he was studying law. The death of one whom he had designed should be his partner in the law business led to his uniting with the Church. In 1830 he was a member of the Philadelphia Methodist Conference, and he became successively pastor at Elizabeth, N. J., and at Orange, agent of Dickinson College at Carlisle, pastor of churches in Philadelphia and New York for the next five years, and financial secretary of the American Bible Society for four years. In 1842, having already rallied around him a wealthy congregation as pastor of the Forsyth-street Church, he received the degree of M.D. from the Vermont University. In the same year Dickinson College conferred upon him the degree of A.M., and that of D.D. in 1844, in which year he was chosen one of the Bishops of the M. E. Church. In 1852 he was ordained deacon, and created an elder in 1854. THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

There has been a new deal in the League-pennant game, though what has not yet been officially declared. It has been brought about by the failure of two of the League nines to comply with the Association's constitutional rule, which obliges them to carry out the season's programme of appointed and arranged games. The clause of Section 1 of Article XII of the League constitution governing the question is as follows:

"Each club entering the lists shall play ten games with every other club so entering, and if any club shall, of its own fault, fail to finish its series with every other club, its game shall not be counted at the close of the season, and such club shall not be eligible to enter the championship lists the ensuing season."

This rule both the Athletic and Mutual Clubs have violated, the former not having sufficient funds in their treasury to pay their players the arrears of salaries due them, and still less, of course, to defray the expenses of an unprofitable tour West; while the manager of the latter club having no stock-company funds to use, does not feel willing to lay a thousand dollars out of his own pocket to pay the expenses of a tour which will yield him no compensating returns. It therefore follows that the games of these clubs will be thrown out of the record in November; and, as the Boston and Hartford Clubs have played their full quota of games with the Mutual and Athletic Clubs, and the Bostons with the Mutuals, it will be seen that the remaining contests between the Mutuals and Hartfords will be of no account in deciding any issue yet remaining in which the Hartfords are interested. The absence of the Athletics and Mutuals from the arena will lessen the number of games to be played considerably. By way of showing what the record will be in November, we give below the pennant record to Sept. 24, leaving out of the count the games of the Athletic and Mutual Clubs:

	Boston.	Chicago.	Cincinnati.	Hartford.	Louisville.	St. Louis.	Games Won.
Boston	..	1	8	2	4	4	19
Chicago	9	..	10	4	9	4	36
Cincinnati	0	0	..	1	2	2	5
Hartford	4	4	6	..	7	3	26
Louisville	4	1	8	1	..	4	18
St. Louis	4	6	7	5	6	..	28
Games lost	23	12	39	13	28	17	132

By this table it will be seen that the Chicago lead the St. Louis by eight games, and the latter lead Hartford by two, while Boston is behind Hartford by seven. It therefore seems the question of the ultimate success of Chicago or Boston leave the issue of the contest between St. Louis and Hartford for second place in a more interesting position than before, while Boston is certainly thrown to fourth place, with Louisville close to the "Reds" rivals, Cincinnati being last on the list, as so placed by THE CLIPPER last March.

The full record of the pennant race up to Sept. 24, inclusive, is as follows:

	Athletic.	Baltimore.	Boston.	Chicago.	Cincinnati.	Hartford.	Louisville.	Mutual.	St. Louis.	Games Won.	Games Lost.	Games Played.	Games to Play.	Per Cent.
Athletic	..	1	1	5	2	4	0	14	1	60	11	71	9	.845
Boston	9	..	1	9	2	4	3	36	0	62	8	70	10	.886
Chicago	3	9	..	10	4	9	4	36	0	69	12	81	1	.851
Cincinnati	3	0	0	..	1	2	1	9	0	16	9	25	55	.640
Hartford	3	6	4	6	..	7	3	38	1	57	10	67	13	.850
Louisville	3	2	1	8	1	..	4	30	0	56	11	67	13	.835
Mutual	3	2	1	7	4	3	..	21	1	56	11	67	13	.835
St. Louis	8	4	6	7	4	3	6	..	42	0	60	9	69	.869
Game's lost	45	26	14	51	18	33	34	18	239	6	484	72

A summary of the above shows the clubs occupying the following relative positions:

	Won.	Lost.		Won.	Lost.
Chicago	50	14	Mutual	21	34
St. Louis	42	18	Athletic	14	45
Hartford	38	18	Cincinnati	9	51
Boston	36	26
Louisville	29	33	Totals	239	239

By way of still further showing the condition of the contesting teams, we give below a table exhibiting the number of full and half scores of games each have won—that is, a majority of the ten, and half of the ten each have to play with each other.

	St. Louis.	Chicago.	Hartford.	Boston.	Louisville.	Mutual.	Athletic.	Cincinnati.	Hartford.	Boston.	Louisville.	Mutual.	Athletic.	Cincinnati.
St. Louis	..	1	0	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
Hartford	1	1	..	1	1	1	1	1	0	1	1	1	1	1
Louisville	0	0	0	0	..	1	1	1	0	0	0	1	1	1
Series lost	0	1	0	2	3	3	5	6	2	3	4	5	6	7

It will be seen by the above table that thus far St. Louis has the best showing, as that club has won a majority of series—that is, best six out of the ten—as the Chicago, and a half series—five out of the ten—which the Chicagos as yet have not. The remaining contests in which the latter part of next out West will therefore decide which club has the better record of won series, Chicago or St. Louis; and which of the two clubs, St. Louis and Hartford, is to occupy second place. St. Louis now leading Hartford by but two games. The record showing the number of games yet to be played and finished those in the Athletic and Mutual Clubs. Leaving these out, the six clubs yet remaining in the arena have to play the following:

	Hartford.	Boston.	Chicago.	St. Louis.	Louisville.	Cincinnati.	Games to Play.
Hartford	..	3	2	2	2	2	13
Boston	3	..	2	2	1	0	8
Cincinnati	2	2	..	2	1	0	7
St. Louis	2	2	2	..	2	2	10
Louisville	2	1	1	2	..	2	8
Chicago	2	0	0	2	2	..	6
Games to play	10	8	5	4	2	4	34

There therefore remain, from Sept. 24, but seventeen games to be played to complete the record for 1876. From the above complete set of tables a pretty accurate estimate of the probable success of the competing teams can be arrived at. For instance, Hartford has ten games to play; and should they win all, they would tie the Chicago score of two games, but would lose the pennant by the existing score of defeats—18 to 14—against them. St. Louis has won 28—of games that will be counted, we mean—and, should they win all they have to play, will be exactly one behind Chicago by 31 to 36. It will therefore be seen, as we said before, that the main struggle for the next two weeks will be for the second and third places, the St. Louis and Hartford and the Hartford and Boston being the contestants, with Louisville added as fighting for fourth place, with fair chances of success.

AUBURN (N. Y.) CLUB GAMES.

On Sept. 19 the Cass Club of Detroit, Mich., visited Auburn, N.Y., and there encountered the home team, by whom the Wolverines were beaten after a sharp struggle:

They met again on the following day, when the local nine were again triumphant, the score being 8 to 3. On Thursday, the 21st inst., the Dark Blues of Hartford made their first appearance there, and had hard work to defeat the Auburns, the score standing 6 to 5 at the fifth inning and 1 and 1, and at the end of the eighth 2 and 1, in favor of the visitors, a couple of unfortunate errors in the ninth inning alone on the part of the Auburns giving the Hartfords to score two runs, which left the totals at 4 to 1 in the latter's favor. A glance at the subjoined score will show that the play of the Dark Blues was better than their average, they making but two errors during the game, neither of which operated in the least against them.

STAR vs. HARTFORD.

A second great victory was obtained by the Syracuse (N. Y.) Club on their grounds Sept. 22. This time the victims were the Hartford Club, who, like the Chicagos before them, were unsuccessful in securing a solitary run, though they were let off a little easier than the Whites, having but one run scored against them. They were utterly unable to do anything with McCormick's pitching, and the only men of the nine who reached a base were Harbidge in the third inning and Carey in the eighth, but neither of them could advance beyond second. The fielding was very sharp, especially on the part of the Stars, who are credited with but one error against half a dozen by their antagonists. The run made by the local players was secured in the fifth inning, thuswise: Adams led off with a clean hit, and was transported to second by McCormick's safe hit. Dorgan at this time stepped up in the order, and was not found wanting. He got in one of his long right-field corkers, Adams coming home on the hit. York fielded the ball back:

These clubs encountered each other again on Saturday, 23d. The afternoon set in dark and gloomy, and for some time play was regarded as impossible; but about half past 3 it cleared up a little, and both nines repaired to the grounds, which were in anything but a good condition. About 3.15 a respectable crowd had arrived, numbering about 1,000 people, the grand-stand being pretty well filled. Few looked for a second game between the Stars and Hartfords. There were some changes made in both clubs, Allen being substituted on the Star nine for Adams, who is laid up, and Remsen for Harbidge on the Hartfords. The Hartfords, although very fine fielders, were outbatted by the Stars, the visitors being still unable to get the hang of McCormick's balls. As a pitcher he is a success. McKinnon at first base did finely, and a ball that comes within reach of his long legs or arms is pretty sure of stopping right there. The fielding of Tupper was excellent, and Dorgan, catcher, can always be depended upon. There were a number of errors on both sides, due more to the miserable state of the weather and ball than to poor playing, both clubs putting forth every exertion, and the Stars scoring nine clean hits off Cummings' pitching. At one time the score was 4 to 1 in favor of the Hartfords; but the Stars (who seem always to play a better up-hill game than any other) rapidly brought the score to a tie, and at the end of the seventh inning the game was drawn on account of rain, the score standing 5 to 5. Just before the game was called a pleasant little affair occurred "mid dew on the hills," the same being a presentation of a purse of $30 to the Star nine by voluntary contributions of the citizens. Monday, Sept. 25, the famous Buckeyes of Columbus, O., were to cross bats with the Stars.

EUREKA OF CAMDEN, N. J.

One of the best amateur nines of New Jersey is located at Camden, N. J., and its name is Eureka. Below we present scores of games played by them Sept. 16, 18, 19, respectively, with the Alerts and Arctics of Philadelphia, and the Beverly (Pa.) Club. That with the Arctics resulted in a tie, darkness preventing the contest being decided:

A FLORAL TRIBUTE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JOEL G. FLOYD.

A garland I would weave, Annette,
A garland bright of tallest flowers
That ever grew 'neath Summer skies,
That ever bloomed in Eden's bowers.

Fresh roses, mignonettes and pinks,
Sweet jessamine and heliotrope,
Forget-me-nots and bleeding-hearts,
And hawthorn sprig—emblem of hope.

With buttercups and pansies bright,
Hearts-ease, lilies and violets blue,
Sweet honeysuckle—bond of love—
All emblems of the good and true.

These flowers, my darling, loved Annette,
Perfumed with dews from heaven above,
Would I present to you, my dear,
In token of my heart's best love.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 11, 1876.

WRONGED.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY MRS. A. ELMORE.

CHAPTER I.

Many years have elapsed since Doctor Andrew McKensie held the enviable position of "pre-eminent" among the skillful and trustworthy men who adorned the medical profession in the city of New Orleans. His tall, stout, sedate countenance and snow-white hair were known through all the length and breadth of the populous city, and his coming was hailed with gladness by anxious watchers and weary sufferers. His voice charmed and surprised a stranger, so agreeable was it, and contrasting so strongly with the stern, quiet features. There was a sad curve to the mouth that was never absent: even music, which he loved, could not quite charm it away.

When the far-away look in his dark-brown eyes was for a moment dispelled by some grand idea useful to his profession, or some new success of his skillful hands gladdened his kindly heart, the mouth relaxed slightly, but could not be said to smile.

Fastidiously neat in his person, always plainly dressed, with his white hands encased in finest kid, whether summoned to some mansion in an aristocratic neighborhood, or on his way to the attic of a dilapidated tenement-house, where they would be thrown aside to assist in controlling some victim of delirium tremens, dress the wounds of a cruelly beaten wife, or feed with womanly skill a half-famished babe. Ah! the babies, how they loved him, although he never laughed with them. The more forlorn and neglected they were, the more earnest was the yearning look of his wonderful, fathomless eyes.

Keenly sensitive in regard to his profession, recognizing the nobility that belongs of right to a skillful, self-sacrificing, true-hearted physician, he was ever ready to give counsel and advice, and assist younger men to deserved promotion, but never willing to join their convivial gatherings. His face never reflected the mirth of the banquet table, his gifted tongue never responded to the toast of some more social members of the fraternity; from the sound of the merry dance he hurried swiftly away. Why? had been asked scores of times, to receive no direct reply. Some dark years in his life must have changed the nature that could so gently minister to a dying wanderer or soothe a pain-racked child.

One never-to-be-forgotten Summer the sun held undisputed sway over the city. No rain clouds challenged his kingly tyranny. There was no dew to cool the pestilent night-air, and a fatal fever spread its wing over the fair city, and its noisome breath tainted every home. Crape hung at many doors—hung motionless. There was not even a faint breeze to fan the cheek of the dying, and the strong west wind with health-giving breath came not near the smitten city. The sound of mourning where lay the dead, freed from pain, floated sadly out of shaded windows. The echo of pain-created moans broke on the stillness where some victim struggled back to life. No sound rose from the deserted streets save the hurrying footsteps of patient physicians, the swiftly-driven, unattended hearses, with their freight of fast-decaying dead, and anon some heartless wretch, with ribald words flung out on the air, so seemingly void of human presence, daring to laugh at the hideous power or joke at the blackened faces of the dead.

Day and night Doctor McKensie rode as with a charmed life. Sometimes his skilful hand from the hand of death some loved one was rescued with rejoicing; more frequently he came but to see the death-hue closing out from eye and cheek all signs of life.

His step grew weary, and he was becoming neglectful of his toilet; a dull look came into his beautiful eyes; and at last, when the west wind crept back to look at the devastation, and with fierce lightning and torrents of rain the fever was driven out, Doctor McKensie lay, tossing and moaning with unrelenting pain.

Calling, calling, always calling: "Carlie! Carlie! sweet wife, come to me;" "O Carlie! I cannot find you:" "Where is the baby, Carlie?—our baby;" "O Carlie, come!" he would stretch out his slender hands, then fall back on his pillow exhausted, muttering incoherently of some "wrong," of a dance where "Carlie hung on the arm of his enemy."

The sun going down through the western sky threw lingering farewell glances into a pleasant chamber elegantly furnished, where ofttimes had, watching his faded glories, sat the lonely man who lay there dying. No woman's presence with loving touch and gentle words soothed him; but a few tried friends, strong, noble-hearted men, were gathered in the room. No delirium excited him now. For hours no word had passed the closed lips. He opened his eyes and, smiling, said fervently:

"Thank God! Here endeth the chapter of life."

Dr. Davis, leaning over him, and, clasping his hand, asked:

"Is there anything you desire to have done? Have you arranged for this?"

"All things have long been made ready. I have but one request to make. Send word or line of my dreadful illness to my name-sake Charles Andrew McKensie, and giving the street and number of my residence—to the principal lake-shore cities. That is all."

Then relapsing silently the hands of those who stood about him, he turned his face to the sunset, and his spirit went out over an untried path, as the daylight deepened into twilight, the high brow and gathered up its far-spread gold to tinge other scenes with beauty.

While the tall form, robed for burial, was lying in the parlor, little children came softly, and, looking with awe-struck faces, whispered: "How good he was!" Stalwart men, with quivering lips and tears of grateful praise he could not hear, looked on their dead friend's calm face. From mansions where he was loved came choice flowers—sweet tributes that his own hands had often laid beside other still forms. Women from garret and cellar came and touched his cold hands reverently. He was "the people's dead." The sad look had left the mouth, and the expression was now as serene as it might have been at the close of a joyous, happy life.

When the group that bore him to the grave (a group that held no claim save that of love) returned to the reading of the will, it was found that the college of which he had been one of the chief supporters was to receive the income of his large fortune.

"Unless my son by my beloved wife, Edina Charlotte McKensie, since divorced and remarried, should be found," read the lawyer solemnly. "In which event the trustees shall pay over to him one-half the value of my entire possessions, and one-half the income derived from the property during the time of my decease until my son is identified."

To all save the attorney and a long-time servant this was startling intelligence. A few legacies were added to the servants, his library was to be given to the college. In a few days no trace of the lonely life he led remained. A new tenant and new furniture changed it all.

His death had been noticed as requested in some of the prominent Northern papers; and a few days before the new tenant came into possession, a lady, deeply veiled and elegantly dressed, called one afternoon at the house, and, without giving her name, entered into conversation with the housekeeper.

"Was this the residence of Doctor McKensie?" she asked.

"Yes, madam," was the reply.

"Were you his housekeeper?"

"Yes, madam, for ten years; and my husband was his coachman for a still longer time."

Doctor McKensie could never consent to be a slaveholder, and his household was composed entirely of "freed help." Bess had been owned by an educated lady, whose gentle manners and cultivated language had been copied to a great extent by her. She was really a very capable, intelligent woman, and had the plantation modes of speech. Her devotion to the Doctor was disinterested and deathless; and this lady, who manifested so deep an interest in him, found ready sympathy in the kind-hearted old woman, who gladly would have wrapped her arms about her as she wept and listened to all her sorrowful story.

"Did he ever visit the North while you were with him?"

"Soon after I came as housekeeper he went North, and was gone a long time, but I do not know just where."

"Did he leave a will?"

"Yes, madam."

"Tell me all that you can of it."

The housekeeper repeated quite accurately the contents of the instrument. When she came to the passage, "If my son be found," etc., the lady, forgetful of the other's presence, threw back her veil, and, pacing the floor in great agitation, repeated the words with mournful cadence. Although the eyes were closed, tears forced their way through the long lashes and dropped on her bosom unheeded.

Recovering her self-possession, she resumed her seat, and said to the astonished housekeeper:

"Now, tell me just how he died, and what he said."

She listened patiently to the story, folding her hands and controlling her face. When all was told, she exclaimed:

"O my God! what sorrow, what cruelty! Is there no redress? Lead me to his room!" she impulsively demanded, and was conducted to the open door.

Again the sun was setting as when his life went out in its last rays, and she stood in the centre of the room, studying all its appointments and inquiring how he looked. Then, dropping on her knees by the bedside, she buried her face in her hands and wept long and convulsively.

Aunt Bess, with her apron to her eyes, waited until she rose and had looked out of the window, which commanded a view of the broad river and its floating palaces, with gay streamers flung to the breeze. On his table was lying a small edition of "Wordsworth," bearing marks of frequent perusal. With reverent touch of the last book he had read—perchance, some sultry night while the fever was raging, and, with nerves unstrung, he could not sleep—she placed it in her pocket. In the parlor the strange lady stood as at the foot of a coffin, and gazed as if upon the face of the dead.

"Have you a photograph?" she inquired.

"He never would have one taken," replied Aunt Bess. "He did have a dim old likeness of himself and a lady, but his man took it away with him, and I do not know where he went. There was something for him to do after the funeral, but he did not tell anyone what it was."

Thanking her for her kindness, and writing the number of his burial-plot and the date of the interment in her memorandum book, she passed out, and, stepping into the carriage that had brought her, was driven rapidly to the depot.

So much of mystery was manifested in her manner that the housekeeper, acting as a self-appointed investigating committee, questioned the driver, which she knew, and learned that he was waiting at the depot when the train came in. The veiled lady asked for a carriage and was assisted by an official. She had no baggage, but, handing him a card, desired to be driven to the place at once. He received his directions from the officer. When she left the carriage she asked him to wait for her, and he returned in time to catch the north-ward-bound through train. He had overheard her say while the carriage was waiting for others to clear the way: "Poor Carlie and her boy! O my God! her boy! Where is he, poor baby?" Inquiry of the conductor proved that she had come directly from Cleveland on a through train.

There was a general impression that she must be the discarded wife, and was seeking an opportunity to break the will; but months went by and lengthened into years, still no claims were presented.

Doctor McKensie's place was filled by other and younger men, although he was not forgotten. Many remembered him gratefully, thinking often of his sadness and wondering if the beautiful woman who came so sadly and mysteriously, was his wife, for her visit was gossiped about, even reaching the ears of the reporters for the daily press, and it was written up by them with the usual number of mistakes, precluding all possibility of recognition by any friends she might have chosen not to make aware of her flying trip.

CHAPTER II.

"Mabel, my sister, my friend, will you tell me, after all these years of tried and proved friendship, something of your early life? Why is there always a shadow on your sweet face? I have never sought your confidence, as you seemed to prefer to bear your burden alone; but, observing a change in your face which alarms me, I offer you my aid and counsel."

The voice was low and sweet, yet firm, as, also, you would have known at a glance, was the little woman who spoke the words. The friends whom we have introduced to you were sitting alone in a charming little parlor in one of the neatest and cosiest little cottages that adorned the suburbs of a thriving Western city; so still, so calm, was the sweet June air that its influence aided the sympathetic words to reach the heart of the patient, reticent Mabel Carswell. Her face was marble-white, the proud lips were compressed, changing the usually sweet expression to one of strong, unyielding firmness. A few moments of utter silence and the lips wavered, there was a quivering of the delicate chin, a throbbing of the blue-veined temples, a swelling of the exquisite throat, and on the long lashes of the drooping eyelids trembled and then dropped a few hesitating tears. The arm of her friend Edith Amesley was thrown about her, but word of neither chiding nor comfort was spoken until the long-tried heart had relieved its bitterness by such weeping as only marks long intervals with women who know what sorrow is.

While the tears are flowing and Edith is waiting, we will tell you of the friends. Mabel Carswell at the time of this interview was thirty-three, but her years sat so gracefully as to delude strangers into the belief that she was not more than twenty-five. A magnificently-developed woman of commanding height, with a face schooled to perfect obedience of expression and a will that acknowledged no master, albeit she was ruled by a tyrant. Fairer complexion never added charm to any face: the features being delicate for her size. A head that denoted fine intellectual as well as social development was adorned by a massive coil of dark, bright brown hair, lustrous as satin and pliable as floss when caprice dictated some new style of coiffure. An arm and neck that have been represented in oil and marble by artists of world-wide fame: eyes of a wonderful blue—calm, never surprised, always beautiful eyes. Her smile (the rarely laughed) was an expression of exquisite beauty never to be forgotten. Graceful in every motion, with a quiet, easy, natural grace, equally noticeable whether she was employed in domestic duties, entertaining friends in her beautiful home, or the reigning belle of a grand reception.

Very different was the friend who sat with her in silent sympathy. Edith Amesley was a little years old, small, slight, energetic, impulsive—plain, you would have said at a first glance, but a further acquaintance would reveal a wonderful pair of eyes, at times, when animated, almost black, and with a deep-set, elfish look that portrayed keen wit and a world of social fascinations; brown when sympathy predominated her heart of love, soft, intellectual gray when thinking of some duty for her ever-busy pen. An exquisite mouth when she talked, and her eyes lit up, as her friends said. A hand that bewitched one with its magnetic touch and softness. Plain in dress, as the most unimpeachable Quaker; "neat to a fault," even in the arrangement of the glorious wealth of auburn hair, which was the marvel and envy of many, and the especial delight of the little folks, who might comb and brush, curl and braid to their heart's full content, and never disturb the busy reader who owned the treasure.

Many were the queries as to the point of attraction between these two, so unlike, rarely enjoying the same book, and seldom agreeing in religious beliefs or in the choice of friends.

Mabel's husband was to Edith, as she expressed it, "a perpetual nightmare," and she adroitly avoided him, yet with true womanly delicacy she never spoke disparagingly of him to his wife. Nobel proved her nobility by saying no word that could be construed into a confession of domestic unhappiness.

Is the description too lengthy? It would be impossible to paint Mabel Carswell as she really appeared at this age when the majority of American women have faded; she had no need of the accessories of art in making her toilet. The bloom of cheek and lip was natural. The marble purity and satin smoothness of flesh was the inheritance of a long line of beautiful and noble ancestry.

Her tears subsided. She rose; and when a flood of light from the crystal-hung chandelier fell on her face it was calm as though no powerful emotion had ever swept through her soul like the irresistible tide of destroying lava. She gave no indications of intended confidence, but, when she attended her friend to her chamber, she caught her face impulsively with her soft hands, and, looking down into her truthful eyes, she asked in a low but earnest voice:

"Edith, what is the change you see in my face? Tell me truly. I know how well you read faces, and this shall be one more test of your skill."

"O Mabel! I dare not put the thoughts into words," answered Edith with tremulous voice. "I can only pray God that I may be mistaken."

"Edith, you must tell me; what was your thought?"

"It was like an awful vision to me—that you had been so tempted and tried, your lofty purity had been so assailed, that you were hovering on the brink of destruction. I know, darling, that your life has been a sorrowful one. I have never questioned you in regard to it, and know nothing of the chain of circumstances; yet I know that no life can has been a path strewn with thorns, your purity and patience have preserved your beauty, and only a close observer would know that your face wore a mask. O my friend! do not waver now—you have borne all sorrow so long with irreprochable dignity. Bear it a little longer. Your will, yielding once, is lost to you forever, and you would run a downward road rapidly, I fear."

Mabel made no attempt to refute the accusation. She had turned away, and was looking out into the starlit night with no visible emotion. Edith's face was suffused with tears, and the little hands were clasped with a beseeching expression. Mabel kissed her friend "Good-night" and left the room.

Two sleepless ones in that beautiful home saw the moon rise and the stars fade in the dawn of a new day ere they slept; the one praying, hoping, for her friend; the other looking back and tracing her strange life to the present hour, when an unlooked-for visitor lonely, long, desolate heart, and she had resolved to accept it.

Edith was spending the last day, prior to a long journey—involving an absence of many months, if not of years—with Mabel. As they waited at the station tearfully anticipating the separation, Edith whispered:

"O Mabel! be careful, and may God help you to resist temptation."

The years that intervened between the departure and return of Edith had not diminished her love. She gained rich treasures for future use as a writer, and her heart was yet warm, pure and true, when she greeted from Mabel. She had returned to her native land with her patriotic soul more intensely devoted to the interests of her country than ever. She was enthusiastic over the beauty of her own fair land, and it was with a glad heart that she left the cars and was driven first of all to her friend's house.

Mabel was sewing in her vine-draped porch, and watching the wild birds she had coaxed to build their nests in vine and shrub and tree about her home. With a cry of joy she caught Edith in her arms, kissing her again and again.

How changed she was! The lost bloom of health was replaced by art, and the old-time taste was changed to an almost tawdry display of jewels. Mabel's husband was too selfishly dull and stupid to observe in his wife's face the expression written on all faces, young or old, fair or dark, who walk in the forbidden path of lost virtue—the mark of the frail sisterhood of fallen women, pencilled in the unstrung nerves beneath the eyes in indelible characters that no adornment can quite obliterate. Mrs. Amesley was deeply pained, and, leaning back in her arm-chair, studied the face before her, contrasting it with her memories of years ago.

Her husband was the same surly brute, grown more grizzled and repulsive, and Mabel seemed to fear him more. He was coarse, vulgar, unfeeling and uneducated; honest as far as dollars were concerned, honest 'n the hours that make a day's labor. Truthful, but selfish to penurious, mean, unwilling that his wife should have any society, unwilling to live comfortably, and possessing an ungovernable and brutal temper. His horses trembled at his voice, and little children, peering through the gate at Mabel's flowers, fled precipitately at the sound of his heavy footsteps. "Deaf as a post," in which affliction he took refuge from any attempts to reason with him, although it was a singular inconsistency that led him at times to hear what was not designed for his knowledge.

No children gathered in that beautiful home, and, while Mabel loved little ones, she was yet grateful that none came to feel the shadow of unhappiness that rested like a brooding evil forever on her home.

The husband was glad from selfish motives, and then said:

"I don't want any pesky, squalling brats about me making mischief."

As the squalling was likely to seriously affect his comfort when he closed the portals of his ears by shutting the shaggy-trimmed eyes and drawing down the heavy brows, it was a cause for devout thankfulness that the tabooed nuisances had never by mistake fallen into his lawful possession.

Edith and Mabel slept with their arms about each other the night after the glad meeting—or rather talked, weeping and laughing alternately, as they recalled the sorrow borne, or Edith with ready wit related some of the amusing adventures met in her travels. She was a childless widow, but with pleasant memories of a beautiful home and a loving husband. Her bereavements were not habitually paraded, as is too often the indulgence of those similarly situated, to the disgust of all listeners; but it was a sacred legacy, only spoken of when some lesson in patient endurance could be enforced by its recall. She made bright all the lives that surrounded hers, and the love she gave seemed boundless, and held in its folds both young and old, the grave and the gay, extending to the sturdy pony she drove so carelessly and to the fast team of spirited bays that no one else would drive. She might make a home anywhere among her acquaintances, and be welcome "for always," as a sturdy five-year-old lover of hers declared. And more than one "many times five-year-old" would gladly have taken care of the charming woman for his own pleasure; but she declared "her love had spread around so indiscriminately that it was utterly impossible to collect a sufficient quantity in one place to satisfy even a reasonable man," and she adroitly led her admirers into a tranquil sea of worthy friendship without betraying their luckless wooing or mortifying their pride. Her keen wit was always half-unsheathed, and woe betide the meddlesome gossip who endeavored to play Paul Pry and learn whether she had "refused him." A vivid picture of a hooked nose and a pair of glasses, with a bewildered pair of eyes looking over them, still hangs in the memory gallery of a "set" younger than Edith, but still demanding her society, who had listened to a very earnest, deliberate inquiry addressed to her.

"I want to know, did you actually refuse Adonirani?"

"Yes. I did, and will do it again, the impudent puppy! Such insufferable vanity as some men are possessed of is really ridiculous."

Such an outburst from Edith quite startled the young ladies present, and they inquired excitedly:

"What is the matter? Did he propose?"

Propose! Yes, I think he did propose," and her face expressed great indignation. "He proposed that I should part his back hair for him, and after I had my gloves on too; but I did not know that anybody was listening, as I never would have told of it—never!" And no one knew whether she was in earnest or not.

Edith's sunny smile flitted rom her face when she "slipped away from old friends," and, going unseen to the cemetery, laid tributes of love expressed in sweetest of flowers on the grave where husband and baby slept together. There she "rested" and laid aside for a little time the forced cheerfulness that, grateful as it was to many, yet brought her cruel stab from thoughtless lips—the charge of "forgetfulness."

Mabel came and sat down on the ottoman by her side in her morning-robe of white, and, resting the faultless arm on her lap, looked into the face that was growing beautiful with added years, as she said:

"Edith, you have fathomed my secret. I see it reflected in the pained look of your clear eyes. The time has come when I can tell you my story, even up to the hour when the change came that you so much deplore. The wrongs that I have endured, my present anxiety, my disgust at the miserable farce I am playing—all these are fast telling on my health, and I can see that I am fading. I am not happy except with the man I love. Love? Oh, no, not love. Love is pure and holy. This is a miserable compromise with the desire for affectionate association. You know that William has no love in his nature, and I have lived a starved, dwarfed life ever since my marriage. I have long thought of telling you my story, beginning at my childhood, and hope you may never know another so sad, so full of wrongs, of deceit and revenge. I shall claim you as my guest for at least a week. We will lay aside work, and, unless interrupted by visitors, when the shade of the chestnut is most pleasant we will sit there, and no prying, listening ears can come undetected near to us, as might be done in the parlor. Keyholes prove strange trumpeters, and walls good mediums, sometimes."

"An O'er-true Tale."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CELIA LOGAN.

The vintage season is a pleasant time in gay, sunny France. Then the village lads and lasses dance and make merry on the green. Full of love, if not hope, were a couple who thus coquetted and danced, some twenty years ago, in the pretty little village of Ermonville. The young man who thus lent himself to the rustic frolics with all the abandon of warm young blood was hardly eighteen years of age, the son of an army-surgeon, whose highest dream was that Gerard Labrune should become a physician; but the youth disdained physic and loved literature, and even while at the college of Charlemagne had written pretty, fanciful bits of poetry for Paris journals under the name of Gerard Nerval. He spent his holidays with an uncle at Ermonville, and made madrigals to village nymphs.

On one occasion there appeared among the dancers a lovely girl with a peachy complexion and golden hair. When he saw her he beheld his ideal—the theme for a poet's dream. It seemed a case of love at first sight, for as often as he asked her she danced with him.

The rustic beaux fell back from her with a sort of awe, and left him in undisputed possession of the field.

"It is strange," he said to himself, "that with so beautiful a creature I should have no rivals! Who can she be?"

The moon was rising over the towers of Ermonville, the night air rustled over the elms, the dew was gathering in crystal drops upon the grass, when the spirited music ceased, and, delirious with his first passion, he led the girl to the dance—had no partner in the dance to a rustic seat under the umbrageous trees, and, stretching himself at her feet, implored her to reveal to him who she was.

"No matter who I am," was the low-voiced reply; "we shall never meet again."

"Impossible! I will follow you to the end of the world—live or you—die for you."

The girl laughed merrily as she answered:

"What! you die for me?"

"Yes."

"Why, you've only known me a few hours, and do not even know my name."

"What is it? Tell me, I beg of you."

"Well," she said hesitatingly, "there can be no harm telling you my name. It is Adrienne."

"Adrienne! A beautiful name!" murmured the young lover, kissing the hem of her robe as it lay on the glistening grass; then, with the strange impetuosity and wild enthusiasm of his race, he flung himself at her feet, imploring her to be his wife.

"O! I cannot," she replied, passing her small white hand wearily over her brow, and half yielding to, half resisting, his caresses. "I can never be the bride of man; I am pledged to be the bride of heaven."

"What can you mean? Believe me of this terrible suspense. Explain yourself."

"Do you see those lofty towers?" she asked, pointing to a castle in the distance, whose grand outlines were distinctly visible in the flood of moonlight. "My father is the lord of that castle."

"No matter!" said Gerard impetuously. "In France the lowliest may become the highest. I will enter the army. I will win distinction, and claim you from your proud father."

"All the honors you might win would be useless. You could not marry my husband."

"Do you then love—are you affianced to another?"

"No."

"What, then, is this mystery?"

"Listen!" she said, bending over him until her light-gold locks touched his burning cheek. "I have done that which I should not have done. I have stolen forth from my home to take a last look at the world. I could not resist the temptation. To-morrow I enter the walls of a cloister, nevermore to dance or hold familiar converse with any of your sex."

Gerard's blood ran cold at her hysterical laugh. He cried:

"You shall not leave me. I see you are forced to this!"

"Yes; but, all the same, I am pledged. My father, a stern man, would kill me if he knew of this escapade of mine. All this night I have been supposed to be in seclusion, buried in prayer and meditation. If the truth were known, my fate would be terrible; but the villagers pity me too much to betray me; still, I dare not stay longer. Let me go!"

Struggling to undo his detaining clasp, she still suffered him to press one long, last kiss upon her lips, and then she fled away in the darkness. Gerard flung himself down in utter despair and desolation. The next day the gates of a convent closed upon Adrienne, and her young lover became a wanderer on the face of the earth.

He drifted to Paris, became a cynic, a Bohemian and a poet, consorting with the best and highest of the great city, now consorting with the lowest in the vilest haunts, sometimes sleeping on a bed which had once rested the limbs of a queen of France, and sometimes on the bare planks of a garret. His friends were charitable and tender with him, and tried to help him shake off the memory of Adrienne. At length, having been left a small patrimony, he determined to reform. He traveled through Germany and Switzerland, wearing on his heart a knot of ribbon he had snatched from Adrienne's breast as she fled from him that night at Ermonville; thence he strayed through Italy and Turkey, writing letters which were published in the new of Paris, and elicited great praise for their force and beauty. He translated "Faust" into French, and received therefor the highest eulogium that Goethe could offer. At length affluent, renowned and reformed, he returned to Paris. Years had elapsed since he had passed his Autumn vacations at Ermonville. The memory of his lost love, which had ruined so many years of his life, was gradually fading away. One night he strolled into a theatre to see a reigning favorite, and in her beheld—Adrienne!

Believing that his eyesight deceived him, he sent to Ermonville to inquire what had become of her. He learned that she had broken away from the convent life, and, meeting no sympathy from her natural protectors, had thrown herself upon the world. Extremes meet.

The solitude of the cloister had been exchanged for the flare of the footlights—the hooded nun had become the painted actress.

Gerard, true to his romance, did not suddenly approach Adrienne, but conceived the idea of writing a play for her, so that he might be near her at rehearsals, and at length, when the author had won her admiration, he would tell her who he was, and of the undying love which had lasted since they danced together on the village green. Alexandre Dumas assisted him to write his play, and he sought the presence of the gifted actress. She was no longer the simple, though highborn maiden of his dreams; she was the spoiled child of the drama, the beauty adored by hundreds of worshipers, each one higher and richer than the poor playwright.

She received him coldly, even haughtily, and Gerard, with the old flame relit and burning fiercer than ever, left her presence to drown his humiliation and grief in old-time excesses. He strolled by night around the house where she slept, wrote tipsy verses of which he was ashamed when sober, drank deeper and deeper, wasting his little fortune rapidly, and losing friends and self-respect. Sometimes he would be found having no home at all, now sleeping in a garret, upon a bed purchased at five sous, and in Summer under the stars upon a stack of grain in the fields that skirt Paris; yet all the time writing articles for the magazines—remarkable for refinement of style and thought.

Adrienne fell ill, and in her lonely hours her heart softened to the poor journalist who for love of her had wasted his whole life. She sent him one line: "Come to me.—ADRIENNE." He only took time to become sober before he sought her, dressed with the olden elegance, for by fits and starts he still made money. Well, it is the old story—she loved him at last! and at last he was happy. But not for long. One day he was sitting by her bed, showing her the ribbon he had always worn, and telling her of the ruined hopes which had followed in the wake of the merry moonlight dance when his mad melancholy began.

"But," he said gayly, "the sad past is over now, and all the long sweet future is ours."

Adrienne trembled in his arms, gave a gasp, and expired.

Horror-struck, he refused to believe that she was dead, and that dreary night sat with her body in his frenzied embrace. From the first, all but he had known that her sickness would prove fatal. When they tore him from the corpse, he disappeared from among his friends; but he was so eccentric in his habits, coming and going without giving any reason, that no notice was taken of his absence.

On one of the coldest mornings in January, a man was found hanging by the neck to a window-grating in one of the most obscure streets of Paris. He was cold and dead. It was Gerard Nerval, the brilliant journalist. The body was swinging on the outer wall of a crazy old hotel, dressed as usual, with the hat on. This circumstance created a great deal of discussion as to whether a man could commit suicide and keep his hat on.

The cord with which he had hung himself was the ribbon which Adrienne had worn, unknotted for the purpose. In his pocket was a fragment of a series of articles running through the Revue de Paris, and entitled "DREAM AND EARNEST."

The stellar lustre of thine eyes,
Within whose April depths I trace
The heaven of thought that sanctifies
The dying saint's uplifted face;
The classic mouth, the chastened smile,
Remind me of my dreams of heaven,
When angels in that blissful isle
Welcome the Peri just forgiven—
These, joined with sweet simplicity,
Make my soul hunger after thee.

And though I know the ocean tide
Of love that surges in my breast
Is in thy gentler soul denied,
With no responsive billow blest,
Yet, still superior to each pain
That unrequited love must feel,
It cannot break the golden chain,
Nor turn my heart to stone or steel;
Nor would I wish thy lot below
To clouded be by pain or woe.

Self-sacrificing, throbbing still
With every hope for thy high weal,
If thy heart long, I would no ill
Would make it feel what now I feel;
Even though the sound of that glad bell,
That showed thee far from me resigned,
Would be my feelings' burial-knell,
And wake a serpent in my mind.
Then very thought itself would bless—
Thy life had one more ray of happiness.

THE LOVER'S LEAP.

A Legend of Niagara.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY HENRY LLEWELLYN WILLIAMS.

It is much too late for a new description of Niagara Falls to be attempted. Besides, the immense mass of water has altered the lay of the land even in fifty years, and longer ago than that did the following event take place there.

It was a golden sunset in the Indian Summer, and a young man, hidden behind a tree, had watched a canoe, impelled by a girl of beauty and strength, skirt the shore, till finally it glided into a creek.

"She is going to Barney's," muttered the man, sighing, and feeling for the hunting-knife in the belt of his buckskin suit. "There's no other house nigh here. But this time I shall know her secret, and why I cannot be loved by her!"

The roar of the waterfall had drowned the plash of the paddle; it smothered that of his moccasins, incautiously snapping the twigs across his path. He ran along the shore for nearly an hour, till he came to a half-abandoned tavern, where seldom came a guest to remind the landlord of the glories of 1812, when the army held headquarters there.

With her agile foot the girl had not been far distanced, and the impatient spy soon saw her appear in the clearing. She stopped uneasily, knocked two pebbles together, and called out, with her eyes on an upper window:

"Captain Mantell, sir, I am here."

Juliana Le Vert was a French Canadian, whose parents had also a dwelling on the American side. She had grown up as free of the river as a salmon. When her mother died, after warning her strictly, she threw off allegiance to the father, whose drunkenness and brutality had been the cause of that mother's death, and dwelt alone. For years she toiled on as a ferry-woman, during which she made good use during the war in buying land from which the cowardly fled. Lively and gay as becomes the race, and independent as an Indian boy, none was surprised at her going about in path or in canoe alone.

Such was her life till Captain Gus Mantell came from Quebec to hunt in the woods and see the Falls. She saw him, and in a week had lost her color, her gayety and her face; she became gloomy and irritable. No more could they hear on the waterside her singing of "A la Claire Fontaine," or the original of "Row, Brothers, Row!" Painful astonishment had been excited by the change, and the name of the Englishman, whose stay was growing protracted, was linked to her own.

The window opened, and the captain's yellow hair, covered partly with a velvet cap, was shown there.

"Come, have you?" said he familiarly. "Just go round to the crow's nest, where I shall meet you in a moment, my lass."

There was a platform reared with a tree at each corner, to one side of the tavern, whence one had a view of the Falls. It was about ten feet from the ground, reached by a rough ladder. The girl tripped thither, not seeing that someone followed her close. With hand on head and in a fatigue-cap, the captain climbed up beside her. But she shrank from his opened arms.

"I'll throw myself over if you touch me!" she said.

"Hoity-toity, my wild girl! How ridiculous you are! You were not so coy this morning with that leather-coated Esau who beat me at shooting for the turkey, and kissed you as a reward for his marksmanship! And yet I told you to have nothing to do with that fellow."

"If he had not singled me out to offer him the prize, I might have seen the sport and came away without anything to cause remorse."

"Stuff! You went to see this Dan Long-range, I engage. Why, Barney tells me you were once 'sitting up' together. Marry him, my girl, and I'll get you a bridal locket from Quebec, for you will not catch me being an obstacle to your happiness, though I am sorry to see you fall into the arms of such a clown. But you refuse to come to London, where you might be the beauty of Vauxhall Gardens, and so—no more on that head."

"What can you mean? Relieve me of this terrible suspense. Explain yourself."

"Do you see those lofty towers?" she asked, pointing to a castle in the distance, whose grand outlines were distinctly visible in the flood of moonlight. "My father is the lord of that castle."

THE NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

The fourth annual prize meeting of the National Rifle Association was held at Creedmoor, L. I., last week, commencing on Monday, Sept. 18, with a tolerably good attendance of spectators and fair weather during the early part of the day, though a cross wind from the southwest interfered with the work of the long-range contestants. It had no visible effect upon the firing at the shorter distances, however, and in the Judd match, which opened the programme, the scores made were unusually high. The entries, 200 in all, embraced a number of the members of the international teams, the Canadians alone being unrepresented. The conditions were: 200yds., any military rifle, standing position, seven scoring shots, and the winners of the twenty prizes, with their scores, out of the 35 points possible were: F. G. Fullgraff..... 34 | Robert Luke..... 29
George Cowles..... 31 | Archibald Menzies..... 29
W. Geary..... 31 | C. Van Orden..... 29
Henry Fulton..... 30 | A. Crapsey..... 29
William Robertson..... 30 | L. L. Mills..... 29
S. A. Bates..... 30 | D. C. Pinney..... 29
D. Chauncey Jr..... 30 | T. M. Linton..... 29
J. S. Barton..... 29 | Alexander Ward..... 29
O. C. Hofman..... 29 | G. D. Hobart..... 29
J. B. Frothingham..... 29 | J. P. Hall..... 28
B. S. Davis tied with Hall for the twentieth prize, and in the shooting-off the former made an inner and the latter a centre. The names of the winners, and their scores in the competitions which followed, are given below:

SHORT-RANGE MATCH.

Open to all comers, any rifle, 200yds., seven rounds; position, standing; 220 entries.

H. S. Clark	30	Otto Schneelock	28

Seventy-first	270

THIRD DAY—WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 20.

The most interesting event decided on this day was the Interstate Match, in which twelve men made up of the leading scorers in the several New York regimental teams were opposed to a dozen picked men of the Second Connecticut Regiment, the latter coming off victorious. Much interest was likewise evinced in the long-range shooting, the match being characterized by very fine marksmanship, especially on the part of J. K. Milner of the Irish team, who nearly equaled his performance of the previous day by making a full score of fifty points at 1,000yds., and by J. J. Slade of the Australian eight, who made a perfect score at 800yds. It had been intended to bring the meeting to a close to-day, but the Wimbledon match was unavoidably postponed until the morning of the 23d. The winners in the several competitions were as under:

INTERSTATE MATCH.

Open to one team of twelve from each State and Territory, composed of the militia; 200 and 500 yards; position, standing at 200yds., any at 500yds; military rifles in use by the regiment represented; ten rounds; two entries.

Private W. H. Dewar, Eighth Regiment, won the prize presented by the Adjutant-general to the member making the highest aggregate score in the Gatling, State and Army and Navy Journal matches; score, 98 out of a possible 120. He also won the prize presented by J. W. Steward of London, Eng., to the man making the best score in the Gatling, State and First Division matches; score, 111 out of 120.

FOURTH DAY—FRIDAY, SEPT. 22.

Few persons visited the range on the closing day, when the only competition was the Wimbledon match, which the leisurely way in which the short-range marksmen went about their work on the 20th inst. caused to be postponed from that date. The day was unpleasant, a mist hanging over the range and rain falling lightly during the shooting, which was participated in by twenty-three marksmen, all anxious to win the "Wimbledon Cup." The conditions and scores were as follows:

WIMBLEDON MATCH.

Open to all citizens and residents of the United States; 1,000 yards; thirty shots; any rifle; any position.

The second prize, offered by J. H. Steward of London to the marksman making the highest score in the Short-range, Champions' and Long-range matches, was won by E. H. Sanford, who made 370 out of a possible 385 points. In the evening the prizes which had been won during the meeting were presented to the victorious riflemen at the State Arsenal, in Seventh avenue, where a numerous company assembled in the main drill-room. After the various prizes had been handed to their owners, Col. C. B. Mitchell, on behalf of the riflemen of America, presented mementos to J. K. Milner and Major Leech of the Irish team; that presented to the former, a gold-lined silver goblet, bearing this inscription: "American Riflemen to J. K. Milner of the Irish Rifle Team, to commemorate his unprecedented score of fifteen consecutive bull's-eyes at 1,000 yards, in the International Match at Creedmoor, America, Sept. 14, 1876." Prior to the presentation exercises, action was taken by the Executive Committee on a protest entered by the Seventh Regiment team against the Forty-eighth Regiment of Oswego, on the ground that the latter had filed the sights of their guns, in order to produce a lower elevation. The protest was sustained, and the scores of the Forty-eighth in the matches wherein they won prizes were thrown out.

THE INTERNATIONAL RIFLE MATCH.
The American Team Again Win.

SCORE, 1,165 TO 1,154.

For the third time have the representative riflemen of America and Ireland met in a match shoot, and again has the Eagle triumphed. The scene of conflict this time was the same ground upon which the team from the States achieved their first victory over the flower of the Emerald marksmen—Creedmoor, L. I., and the eventful day Thursday, Sept. 21. The interest taken in the match was less than in the great contest of the week previously, but still it was sufficient to bring to the range over five thousand spectators. The weather was very favorable, the gusty easterly wind, though a chilling, causing little trouble to the contestants, though perhaps bothering the foreigners less than our own men. As in the two previous matches at Creedmoor and Dollymount, the teams were composed of six men each, instead of eight, as in the Centennial long-range match. The contest was governed by the regulations of the National Rifle Association, and the conditions were the same as before. The first gun was fired at 11.18 A. M., Col. Farwell of the Americans opening the competition in a manner which augured well for the side, as his bullet went plump into the bull's-eye. Rathbone was the favorite, individually, over all others, and, as expected, he followed the example of his predecessor, putting the lead fairly in the "bull." Dakin, Fulton, and Weber followed with centres, and Hall closed the first round for his side with an inner. The Irishmen commenced better, Rigby, Fenton, Johnson and Milner each hitting the bull's-eye, Joynt following with an inner, and Dyas finishing up with a centre. At the close of the fifth round the Americans stood 132 to 130 for their opponents, but in the next five rounds they gained an advantage of six more points, making their totals 271 to 263. This lead they nearly doubled in the succeeding five shots, the figures at the termination of the firing at 900yds. standing 409 to 394. As before, Col. Farwell was the first shot on the second range, and he did as well as then, planting the leaden missile fairly in the spot which each man of the twelve strove to hit. All the others of the team did well, but their opponents fell off a little from their work at the opening of the shorter-range firing. When the first five rounds had been discharged, it was found that the home six were seventeen points to the good, which they had increased to twenty-two at the end of the tenth round, and when the last shot had cracked at this range the score stood 386 to 369, showing the Americans to be thirty-two points in advance. The best shooting was done by Milner of the Irish team, who made twelve bull's-eyes and three centres—a total of 72. Farwell and Rathbone topped the scores on the American side, with 69 each.

Although it seemed exceedingly doubtful that the Irishmen could overcome the great lead obtained by their antagonists, yet their hearts did not fail them, nor did the confidence of their friends grow much less, for they had not forgotten the way in which, in the face of great odds, their favorites had pulled up on Sept. 13, and came so nigh securing a remarkable victory. Hard did they struggle to win, too; and had the task before them not been so exceedingly difficult, they might have done so, especially as they were helped along by seven round O's on the part of Col. Farwell: but they failed again, after cutting down the lead of their skillful opponents to eleven points. Many on the grounds who on previous occasions were in sympathy with the Americans had wished for the success of the visiting team, on account of the indomitable pluck and perseverance they had shown, and because the impression prevailed that another victory for our team would put an end to rifle matches between the two countries; consequently, when the result was made known a feeling of disappointment pervaded the assemblage, and there was a lack of that enthusiasm characterizing previous triumphs of our riflemen. The most noticeable feature of the shooting at this range was the fact that Farwell made no fewer than six clean misses—due to that of his favorite, seldom-failing rifle had "leaded" beyond his power to clean it, and in consequence became practically useless for the purpose. He was loth to give it up for a new weapon, but at the eighth shot he did, and scored an inner, followed by another; but, unfortunately, his final shot was a bull's-eye in the wrong target, counting him another miss. The performance of Milner at 900 yards was here equaled by Allen, whose dozen bull's-eyes and two centres amounted to 72, thus leading his side. Gen. Dakin followed him with the same number of bull's-eyes, a centre and two inners, making a total of 70. Dyas was the favorite at this range, but a miss for his last shot spoiled his score, which, however, was the best of all made by his countrymen. The individual and aggregate scores are given:

THE TURF.

TROTTING AT WAVERLY PARK, N. J.

The annual fair of the New Jersey State Agricultural Association commenced at Waverly Park on Tuesday, Sept. 19. The weather was fine, and the attendance very large. The opening race on the first day was for a purse of $150, for four-year-olds owned in the State; $75 to first horse, $50 to second, and $25 to third. Eight out of the fourteen horses entered contested the purse, A. N. Troth's b. g. Flying Jib having the race in four heats, and beating C. P. Rose's b. f. Nina (who took the first heat, and was second in the following three), W. C. Norton's b. f. Windsor Maid (third), T. Brown's b. f. Emma, E. A. Myers' g. g. Gray Dick, S. Smalley's b. f. Kitty Spinner, A. B. Darling's Lady Conklin, and M. Hand's c. g. Young Malcolm. Time, 2:51¾, 2:42½, 2:45½, 2:50. A second race for gentlemen's roadsters owned in the State, for a purse of $150, that had not won first, second or third money in any heat-race, owners to drive, to road wagons, produced a great deal of excitement. It was won by P. D. Van Syckle's c. g. Dan in three straight heats, beating J. J. Byerson's c. g. Henry G., W. McKay's g. m. Lizzie A., and Col. D. Coy Kendall's br. g. Rattle; time, 2:49¼, 2:53½, 2:57½. The third trot was for a purse of $200, for horses that had never been beaten 2:58; $100 to first, $60 to second and $40 to the third horse. Of the sixteen entries thirteen started, C. G. Hoffman's br. m. Cincinnati Maid winning in four heats, beating S. A. Baird's c. m. Belle of Otsego (who won the first heat and took second money), J. M. Chandler's b. m. Lady Dexter (third money), and ten others. Time, 2:40½, 2:40, 2:40¾, 2:40. A running race for a purse of $50, half-mile heats, was won by Dr. R. Ogle's b. h. Fleetwood, ly Australian, in two straight heats, beating Don Victor (second), Julia A. and Business. No time taken.

On the second day, Wednesday, Sept. 20, the first trot was for a purse of $300 for horses that had never trotted better than 2:38; $175 to the first, $75 to second, and $50 to the third horse. Only three out of the eight horses came to the post, viz., S. A. Baird's c. g. Billy Mix, M. Brophy's c. m. Lady F., and P. Manee's b. m. Vermont Maid. Billy Mix won in three straight heats, Lady F. taking second money; time, 2:40¾, 2:41¾, 2:41. A team race for a purse of $225, divided into $125 to first, $60 to second, and $40 to third horse, was won by S. A. Baird's Snowflake and Adeline R. in four heats, the only opponents, Isaac Harding's Heeney Kelly and Bolly Lee's filly, taking the third heat; time, 2:42½, 2:40¾, 2:40¾, 2:41¾. A running race for a purse of $125, two miles, was won by R. Ogle's Fleetwood in 3:48¾, beating Don Victor and Julia with ease. A purse of $200, for stallions owned in the State; $100 to first, $50 to second and $25 to third, was won by E. A. Bullock's b. h. Windsor in three straight heats, beating S. A. Baird's b. h. Colonel Upton (second), A. B. Darling's br. h. Kentucky Prince (third), and J. B. Dean's b. h. Hambletonian; time, 2:34½, 2:36¼, 2:36¼.

On the third day, Thursday, Sept. 21, S. A. Baird's c. m. Belle of Otsego won the $200 purse for horses of the 2:48 class, beating J. Randolph's g. g. Thomas (who won the first heat, and took second money, $60), F. N. Chandler's b. m. Lady Dexter (third), Revenge, Indian Girl, Esperance and Henry G. Time, 2:38¾, 2:40½, 2:40¾, 2:40. A purse of $100, for running horses, was won by R. Ogle's b. h. Fleetwood, beating his old opponents, Don Victor and Julia A., in two straight heats. Time, 1:50¾, 1:50¾. An extra purse of $100, for horses that had not beaten 2:35, mile and repeat, was won by S. Crane's r. g. St. George, beating J. Cornelius' b. g. Judge Robertson (who won the first heat) and D. Dunham's c. g. Silvertail. Time, 2:41¾, 2:37½, 2:39. The last race on the fourth day was for a purse of $100, for horses that had never beaten 3:10, divided into $50, $30, and $20, for first, second, third and fourth horses. It was won by R. McCullough's g. g. Duneadon in five heats, beating F. Manee's s. g. Whipple (who was first and third in the second and took second money), W. C. Morton's s. m. Lady Dutchman (third money), Gipsy Girl, Fleetwood, Dolly, and Richmond Girl. Time, 2:40, 2:40½, 2:40, 2:42, 2:42. The second trot was for a purse of $500, for horses of the 2:30 class, which was won by J. Kelly's bk. s. Thomas Jefferson in five heats, beating J. Pawling's b. g. Barney Kelly, who won the third and fourth heats. Time, 2:29¾, 2:29½, 2:30½, 2:30¼, 2:36. The only effect of this heat was to make Carrie N. a better favorite than before, $50 to $25 being the current odds on her winning the race. Fred Tyler proved the winner of the heat in 2:32¼, Harry Gilbert second, Dick Cooper third and Orrville respectively fourth. With two heats against her, Carrie N. still held her position as favorite over the field, her sanguine backers sticking pluckily to her. She raised their hopes by winning the third heat by a length from Harry Gilbert in 2:30½, Fred Tyler third, and Phil Dougherty fourth. Don Carlos ruptured a blood-vessel in this heat when looking very formidable, and was distanced. In consequence of the dissatisfaction expressed at the way Harry Gilbert was being driven Johnny Murphy was substituted for his original driver, and retained the ribbons in the two countries; consequently, when the result was made known a feeling of disappointment pervaded the assemblage, and there was a lack of that enthusiasm characterizing previous triumphs of our riflemen. The most noticeable feature of the shooting at this range was the fact that Farwell made no fewer than six clean misses—due to that of his favorite, seldom-failing rifle had "leaded" beyond his power to clean it, and in consequence became practically useless for the purpose. He was loth to give it up for a new weapon, but at the eighth shot he did, and scored an inner, followed by another; but, unfortunately, his final shot was a bull's-eye in the wrong target, counting him another miss. The performance of Milner at 900 yards was here equaled by Allen, whose dozen bull's-eyes and two centres amounted to 72, thus leading his side. Gen. Dakin followed him with the same number of bull's-eyes, a centre and two inners, making a total of 70. Dyas was the favorite at this range, but a miss for his last shot spoiled his score, which, however, was the best of all made by his countrymen. The individual and aggregate scores are given:

THERE WERE LETTERS in the Detroit (Mich.) Post-office for Sergt. Bates, Mack's Parasol Troupe; J. M. Caugh, comedian; B. M. Shook of Centennial Varieties Co.; and Mr. Kelly, manager of Forepaugh's Circus.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, Sept. 25, '76.

We are all very happy just now, for the precious stranger is flooding the great metropolis with his presence, and we are taking him in and caring for his comfort and enjoyment and welfare generally. He comes at the dawn's early light; he comes by the noonday glare; and he abides with us when the shades of night wrap their mantles around us, and we lie down to pleasant dreams. His presence is felt everywhere—he is first at the breakfast-table, the last to leave the lunch-room, and he spreads himself all over the dining-room ere dinner is announced. Like the independent voter, he comes up smiling, early and often, and his appetite never fails him. The entire city is crowded with him, and such an influx was never before known. He is all amiability and contentment; and when the weary and worn hotel-clerk assigns him to an humble cot upon the roof, or kindly sleeps him in the only spare room in the cellar, his benignant smile attests the fact inside, and his gentle outpouring of the spirit gives evidence that in him we behold the perfect man. He has come upon us like an avalanche, without any premonitory warning; and he talks about the Centennial as though he owned it, as though the world was his. He glides away without alarming the vigils of the guardian of our slumbers, and without intruding upon the privacy of the lynx-eyed clerk. He flies by night, and he gets up and dusts when no eye is upon him, so thoughtful is he of the comfort of others. He was late a-coming; but he is all here at last, and we rejoice at his presence, and shall part from him with many a sad regret. Oh what fund did exist that which now possesses the managerial soul! We never knew what real happiness was until last week, when we gazed upon the lowing face and angelic smile of the metropolitan theatrical manager. He is truly a mortal to be envied, for the stranger has crammed his temple from basement to attic, and hundreds of him are turned away unable to obtain admission. And it makes us lose sight of the toil and trouble of this life as we behold the cheerful expression that lights as with a halo of glory the majestic face and form of this caterer for our amusements. We procured an easy-chair one night last week, and, placing it directly in front of him, we sat down and feasted our eyes upon the sunlight that streamed forth from every furrow and crevice in the manager's sweet face. It was pie for us. We seemed to have reached the hill of rest, and we would have remained in that easy-chair all night if the ungentlemanly porter had not moved us. The treasurer, too, was never so indefatigable as he is now; he fairly boils over with indefatigableness; and if ever there was an angel upon the face of the earth, the treasurer is that angel. No matter how saucy a purchaser of a ticket may be, the treasurer would no more think of knocking him down on the spot than he would think of going to his refreshing slumber without his beer! You can tell a treasurer a half mile off just by his bland smile; the heathen Chinese's is cross and ugly alongside of it. He sells tickets until the last armed foe expires, as it were; when he has sold the house once, he begins at the beginning, and sells it over again, and then makes it lively and intellectual for the diversified holders of the same checks. The work that man accomplishes in one evening is truly appalling. Hasn't he a good chance for making perquisites? Being honest, being capable, he would scorn to do such a cowardly act. It is sufficient for him to know that he is jamming the house like it was a box of sardines; he meets the approving smile of his manager, and he is happy! Doesn't he give the wrong change, and work off bad half-dollars while the rush is going on? Would you have him keep a hundred people waiting while he examines a bad bill he is giving in change? No, no; he studies the public's comfort and time and temper, and he pandders to no selfish, grasping appetite. The gentle man who wrote that beautiful hymn "I Would Not Live Alway" has nevertheless reached a ripe old age. May the life of the treasurer pan out equally enduring, for we should not be able to exist without him.....We have a suggestion to make. It is this: While hotels and boarding-houses are full to overflowing—here is the opportunity for the theatrical manager: let him give an extra performance, commencing at midnight and continuing until daylight doth appear! See? Those who have been barred out of the hotels could here find rest and amusement for less than one dollar per day and upwards, and thus the philanthropic manager would be doing a work of love by sheltering the homeless, and soothing them to rest through the instrumentality of his talented company. To do good is our aim, and, if we can provide cheap lodging-houses for our visitors, the knowledge of having done a bluggage act is all the reward we ask for.....And here let us, for the sake of consistency, indite a few well-intended lines to our guests:

TRUTH AND POETRY.

If you are "blue," then take a bath—
It cannot do you hurt,
For what you think to be despair
Is very often dirt!

.....The manager of Gilmore's concerts does the handsome thing when he announces J. Levy as "the greatest instrumentalist ever born under the English flag." Nobody can complain of that—it removes all cause of war, in so far as it is a tacit admission that those born under the American flag may surpass him. This is deserving of all praise. .....Those who go to the Olympic Theatre in the hope of seeing a pail of Snow thus early in the season will be disappointed, as the acrobatic Snow Brothers never fall. You can tell this to your friends.... We should like to get up a row of some kind, for this Hell-gate-explosion business has made us pant for gore! Why was Miss Amy Fawsitt brought over here to act at Daly's Fifth-avenue Theatre when it is well-known that Miss Fanny Davenport is the leading lady at that house? Is it intended as an insult to America, to our own native talent? Hasn't "our Fan" filled the bill sufficiently and satisfactorily without our sending to England for actresses? What does A. Daly, Esq., mean by it? We have stood by him in his hours of prosperity, and have defended him against the wily encroachments of a foreign foe. Has he no gratitude? Or what has he? We have nothing to say against Miss Fawsitt—ah, no; we do not make war upon women any more than does that other brave, Sitting Bull; but we ask that Mr. Daly should make a suitable explanation of this questionable business. Theatres have been wrecked for less offenses than Augustin the First is guilty of. We should very much dislike to see the Fifth-avenue Theatre dynamited some night! In regard to the wine is sufficient.....And this pleasant allusion to an unpleasant subject harrows up

ANOTHER FACT.

Said Jim to a pretty servant-girl,
"I see you're a-dusta' your;
So yer different from one of our managers,
For he's Augustin Daly!"

.....Here's another matter that has made our nights sleepless and robbed us of every joy. We hear that the managers of the Chestnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, have on file a new play by Frank File of The New York Sun, entitled "Three Days." Now, that is all well enough—we have nothing to complain of in that regard; but what shall we say of that other popular writer, H. A. MacKeever, who is hurrying up a play called "One of These Days?" Is it any wonder that journalists fight brutal duels and fill our streets with blood?.....It is now given out that M. Capoul, a singist of high renown, is about to lead to the altar Mlle. Grevy. What his object may be in leading her there is not stated; but we feel it in our bones that, if he does not mean to sacrifice her at the altar, he intends to marry her, in which event he is not likely to exclaim: "No cards, no cake, no gravy!".....There is a good deal of bad feeling existing between Messrs. Bret Harte and Stuart Robson on the one side, and the dramatic critics of the daily press on the other; and, if something is not speedily done to avert the impending calamity, real corpses will strew the dark and bloody ground. We would fain prevent the rash act, and so offer up "Our Jim" as a sacrifice in behalf of peace and brotherly love. For a certain consideration—the precise sum to be named hereafter—Jim is willing to acknowledge that he did propose to Messrs. Harte and Robson to write favorable notices of "The Two Men of Sandy Bar" in three days and sixty-two cents each notice, and to run them in the daily papers during the absence of the regular critics; he is furthermore willing to make an affidavit that the playwright and the comedian severally entertained this proposition in order to get back at the regulars, but openly spurned it with disgust, as you know. We want to throw oil upon troubled waters, should it meet the approbation of those whom it may concern, will have the effect, at a very small outlay, of smoothing out the rough places in the path of "The Two Men," heal all existing differences, and at once convince the public that the dramatic critics have been entirely unknown to the playwright and the actor, by the alleged statements which have obtained currency. It is thought that the proposition will meet with favor, there being but a dollar or two difference in the price asked and that offered. We do not wish this to go any further until the arrangements are completed. If successful, it may prevent Starbottle from evolving into a bottled star.... They act very rudely to circus actors over there in England, as we very well know. Recently there was a fair in the town of Cockermouth, and things went along well enough until the wrestling match on the programme was reached. One was a Frenchman and the other an Englishman, and at the call of "Time" the Englishman came up smiling, and called upon the Gaul to come forward and show cause, or else forever after hold his peace, matrimonially speaking; but the Frenchman didn't see it in that manner, he was not. Then the dissatisfied crowd got worried and uneasy like, and pretty soon they boiled over and surged into the arena; and, before the iron hand of the law could stay their fell purpose, that infuriated mass of inhumanity fell upon the benches and candy-stands and chandeliers and things, and in the twinkling of an eye the show was a wreck, and the Gaul in the last lives were lost, but were afterwards recovered, having taken shelter in a lime-box. The Gaul complains bitterly of the way he was treated; but Jim has no sympathy for the Frenchman, and thinks he ought to be served like they serve the stew at his boarding-house—"once over is enough for me." Sometimes they see "The Irish Lion" announced at the Bowery Theatre, our visiting friends must not imagine that it is a menagerie! Country papers will please copy.....Talking about menageries and wild beasts, reminds us of a popular impersonator of female characters who is to be in this town in a few days, we may suppose. We propose to give the valuable reader a clever little bit of literature, and at the same time pay a slight tribute to a worthy performer:

ERNEST BYNE.

Your airs and graces make us all
Believe you must be feminine:
Your acts, though you're no Harlequin,
Do well deserve a column, Byne.

.....We admire patriotism—and don't care in what shape it comes, or whether in the original package or not. When we became drafted into the army in the late war, our patriotism found vent in the gentlemanly substitute we sent to defend the nation's honor, and we have never got over it or regretted it since. So we learn, Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer unoughtedly announced that hereafter the performances at their theatre would close with our national anthem by the orchestra, we went right up to see those gentlemen, and to express our gratification at this evidence of their patriotism when other houses and other managers were importing foreign actors to supplant those born and growed upon our own soil; and, though our views were not received with that unanimity of sentiment and patriotic fervor which we had a right to expect, we still cherish the fond hope that the noble efforts of Booth's management to popularize our national airs will meet the reward which they so well deserve. Our friends will please take the anthem "all standing."..... On Oct. 3 Wallack's is to treat its patrons to "Forbidden Fruit," which will be just in season at that time. If the depraved and immoral there expecting to see Eve offering this "Forbidden Fruit," they will be mistaken; it is purely moral, and can be partaken of "by the most fastidious."..... They are burlesquing "Sitting Bull" at one of our theatres, and the leading actor in it converts Sitting Bull into a Wild Bull. Can't you see it? Why, a tame Wild, in the kindness and nobleness of his heart, takes the part of the Bull! And here we may be pardoned for making a few choice rhymes

ABOUT THE BULL, ETCETERA.

"And now," murmured he, as he kissed her again,
"Why can I like your Cuisine no more?"
When they went to the war? Why, the answer is plain,
I'm bound for the 'mouth of the Rosebud,' of course!"

.....They've got a pair of clever dancers for the new piece at Daly's, but one of them is talky (Schilke)!.....And we might also remark that the law will hold you guiltless if you take "Life" in at Daly's. This is so, as we have consulted a lawyer about it. May it be far in the future ere our readers see the end of "Life."

CITY SUMMARY.

JOHN H. MURRAY'S CIRCUS began a season under canvas on Houston street near the East River on Thursday evening, Sept. 21. The principal riders were Woods Cook, who turned a number of somersaults while coursing the circle, and exhibited much dash and daring; Miss Minnie Marks, who rode a horse divested of saddle and bridle; and Miss Sallie Marks, who is what is technically termed a scenic-rider. Mlle. Eva gave some entertaining performances on the tight-rope. Prof. Parker put his dogs through a number of feats, which greatly pleased the spectators. John H. Murray exhibited his trained horse. The corps of acrobats, gymnasts and leapers included Fred Runnells, Geo. Francis, Eugene Leach and James Donovan. Four clowns, at intervals, entertained the audiences with their gibes and jokes—Tom Barry, "Whimsical" Walker, William Marks and Charles H. Adams. Although the weather was not particularly favorable for canvas entertainments, the attendance was large.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, on Sept. 18, the reinforcements to the company included George W. Wood, who performed a bone-solo quite deftly, and subsequently sang Ethiopian melodies; Miss Ada Lynwood, a pleasing vocalist; Keating and Sands, who performed in a creditable manner upon a variety of musical instruments; Mons. and Mme. D'Omer, who gave a variety of difficult feats with swords, and wound up with a clever boxing match; and Charley Bender, who with a corked face sang comic songs. The entertainments in addition to these were furnished by George Dunbar and Natalio Lowande, who gave "La Perche Equipoise;" Bettie Remmelsburg and Antoinette Corsi, who were seen in a double dance; the Barlow Brothers in song-and-dance, and Lew Foster in a double Irish jig; the Foy Sisters in a musical sketch called "Love's Dawn," and Ida in her specialty of "Grimes' Cellar-door;" Hugh Fay in the chief character in a sketch called "The Irish Justice;" and the dramatic company in "Dick Turpin and Tom King."

AT THE COLUMBIA OPERA-HOUSE the company includes Belle Berry, the Ventini Troupe, Ada Freeman, the Monzert Sisters, Emma Lawrence, Winona Bridges, Mlle. Zulella, Marie Connolly, Lavenia, Nellie Pickett, Josie Willard, May Howes, Howard and Sanford, Bobby Daily, J. N. Stansill, J. H. Ryan, Delia Sheppard, E. L. Moore, and the Lawrence Sisters.

MRS. G. C. HOWARD'S COMBINATION in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" constituted the attraction at the Bowery Theatre the past week.

FRANK LEWIS and Quilter and Goldrich are to be added to the company at the Theatre Comique this week.

MESSRS. POOLE & DONNELLY, the new lessees and managers of the Grand Opera-house, open the regular Winter season on Oct. 16, giving dramatic and variety performances. Artists and combinations can arrange dates by addressing the managers as per card. The new lessees look for a liberal patronage as the consequence of the low rate of admission to be charged.

FREDERICK B. WARDE, W. E. Sheridan, and the Misses Gertrude Kellogg and Effie Elsler are to be in the cast of "King Lear" when that tragedy shall be produced at Booth's Theatre.

BELVIL RYAN is the star at the Bowery Theatre. He will act Nat Goslin in "The Flying Scud," which will be preceded by "The Irish Lion."

SIGNOR ERNI, Miss Emily Prior, and Miss Ida Hoyt are the fresh people this week at the Parisian Varieties.

THE PERTINENT INQUIRY among managers at the present time is "Who got the money for writing up 'Baba,'" the new spectacle at Niblo's Garden?

M. B. LEAVITT, manager Mme. Rentz's Minstrels, was in town Sept. 23. He states that business has been excellent.

THE HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITION at Gilmore's Garden, in conjunction with the excellent musical programmes, drew large audiences during the past week, the floral display fully meriting the approval it received, both from the rarity of the specimens exhibited and the exceeding beauty of the collection, undoubtedly one of the finest that have been brought together in this city. This week closes the concert season at this resort, a fitting termination being given to the engagement of the band by a farewell benefit to the leader, P. S. Gilmore, on the closing night, when a programme of more than ordinary attractiveness is offered.

SCANLON AND CRONIN, the Phoiten, Lulu Delmry the Snow Brothers, Griffin and Rice, the Parker Sisters, and J. H. Clifford are the newcomers at the Olympic Theatre Sept. 25.

EVEN IN THE MOST prosperous period of the Theatre Comique the business was never better than it has been since Harrigan & Hart made their first managerial venture there at the commencement of the present season. Occupying, as they do, a foremost rank as performers in the variety profession, they have not been content to rest upon the laurels they have gained in the past, but have labored assiduously and conscientiously to present to their patrons a constant supply of novelties. The public, ever willing to help those who help themselves, has given them solid encouragement. Miss Eloise Allen, whose tuneful voice was advantageously heard in several of the latest songs given to the public, and De Witt Cook, who evinced strength, grace and skill in dexterously manipulating Indian clubs, were the accessions to the company on Sept. 18. A burlesque sketch called "The International Rifle Match," which had previously been performed here, was revived and given in a much improved condition, portions of it having been rewritten. As the recent contests in rifle-shooting at Creedmoor had excited the public mind to a considerable degree, the revival of this sketch was opportune. Four picked teams contested for superiority in skill. These consisted of the Mulligan Guards, commanded by Edward Harrigan as Captain Hussey; the Queen's Invincibles, from Canada, by Tony Hart as Captain Viscount Sir Henry Wainwright, K. B.; the Skidmores, by Billy Barry as Capt. Turnbull; and the Ginger Blues, by Billy Gray as Capt. Primrose. Each team marched to the music of and sang the songs which had become so popular in days gone by. The Canadian team was an innovation, and proved to be quite attractive. Tony Hart was made-up to represent a corpulent person weighing at least three hundred pounds, and was attired in a scarlet uniform coat and white pantaloons, and the members of his team presented a grotesque appearance. They sang a new song, which at once became popular. The sketch was provocative of much laughter. Harrigan and Hart were also seen in the chief characters of the extravaganza entitled "Down Broadway, or the Miniatures 60th," and in their last new sketch—"S. O. T."—which gains in popularity by repetition. Billy Carter gave banjo songs with interpolated witticisms, which were liberally applauded; Adah Richmond sang a number of songs, among them one entitled "When the Whippoorwill is Calling;" Johnson and Bruno displayed their skill in acrobatic and contortion songs-and-dances, which merited the approbation bestowed upon them; Miss Alice Bennett, who reappeared after a brief absence, sang ballads quite acceptably; and the sketch of "Stratagem," with Billy Barry, J. A. Graver, G. W. H. Griffin and Hattie Wilkins as the cast, filled out the bill.

NIBLO'S GARDEN was opened for a season on Sept. 18 with Charles E. Arnold as lessee and manager; Bensen Sherwood, director; Max Maretzek, leader of the orchestra; George F. Devere, stage-manager; and F. F. De Nyse, business-manager. A spectacular extravaganza entitled "Baba" was acted with the following cast:

Amoret.....Miss E. Weathersby | Baba.....W. H. Crane
Abdon.....Y. Bowers | Bon Schiba.....J. W. Ray
Schaiba Bou.....J. E. Irving | Moustapha.....E. W. Marston
Tiptim.....James Danvers | Mezrour.....Harry Taylor
Ganem.....Mr. Glenn | Chicot.....Mr. Jones
Ramedan.....Mr. Cathcart | Chinchon.....Mr. Ross
Blakdes.....Mr. Caldwell | Gulnare.....Miss J. Weathersby
Phrosine..Miss E. Stockman | Lelia.....Miss Rose May
Feiner.....Miss Bliven

IMMORTALS.

Damriel.....Vincent Hogan | Danasch.....Jean Ravel
Hamlyo.....Mr. Bowers | Neres.....Miss Laula Jordan
Cynia.....Miss Pearl Eytinge | Esmeralda.....Miss B. Bernard
Coralina..Miss Nellie Devere | Nuphar.....Miss Ellen Dupuy
Anemone..Miss Effie La Tour

The piece is a translation from the French of a dramatization of "Aladdin," and is in a prologue and three acts. At the first representations the dialogue was prolix and tedious, and was thereafter considerably abbreviated. This portion of the work need not detain critical attention. The costumes, ballets and appointments are magnificent, and fully equal in gorgeousness to any hitherto seen upon the local stage. We cannot bestow the same meed of praise upon the scenery, which cannot compare favorably with that seen in "The Black Crook" or "Leo and Lotus." Some portions of it merit commendation, notably the transformation scenes at the end of each of the three acts, but even in these the coloring does not evince high artistic skill. The music, which was composed by Max Maretzek, is not likely to become popular, as there is not a single air which makes a lasting impression upon the auditor. The ballet corps includes Elizabeth and Helen Minzelli, premieres; Mlle. Malvina, and a large number of coryphees. The sisters Minzelli have handsome faces and well-moulded forms, and they are good, but by no means great, dancers. One is a brunette and the other a blonde, and the latter created the more favorable impression. The dancing of the whole corps was much marred by a marked disregard of time. In the second act there was a march by a large number of women, the evolutions of which were admirably performed. The ballets and the march were arranged by and produced under the supervision of Mons. Blandowski. The attendance has been very large.

W. H. HAMILTON sang "I Stood on the Bridge at Midnight" quite effectively at the San Francisco Minstrels' Opera-house, the past week, and was the only change made in the programme since our last report. The engagement of Mr. Hamilton was not absolutely needed, because they were so arranged that they displayed the abilities of each individual performer to the best advantage.

"MONEY" at the Fifth-avenue Theatre has caused a liberal amount of the circulating medium to flow into the coffers of the treasury. Charles F. Coghlan, the new leading man, grows in popularity, and we think he will become a great favorite. Mr. Daly's new piece, "Life: a Comedy of City Types," is announced for positive production Sept. 26, and then Miss Amy Fawsitt will make her American debut. She is undoubtedly destined to open the seventh week of a prosperous career at Booth's Theatre.

WALTER WENTWORTH, who performed a flying-ring act, and, later, feats of contortion; Miss Henrietta Mollenhauer, the well-known vocalist; and Harry Collins, who acted in sketches, were the new arrivals at the Parisian Varieties the past week. Besides these, Annetta Galletti and Mlle. Bertha were seen in dances, and subsequently, aided by Mons. Cardella, they gave a divertisement entitled "A Thorn Between Two Roses;" Harry Bennett gave a burlesque stump speech; Horace Weston played a banjo; Minnie Hall sang character songs; and the sketches of "Jack Beasley Worried by Armstrong and Oaks" and "Obliging a Friend" introduced other members of the company.

EDWIN ARNOTT has returned to town, and the company which supported him in the Western cities playing "The Gascon" has disbanded.

EDWIN BOOTH is to perform in this city during the present season, and will probably act the character of King Lear for the first time in many years. R. McVicker of Chicago, Ill., has leased the Lyceum Theatre for this purpose.

JULIAN KENT and his trained bear performed to good business in the drama entitled "Wild Bill" at the matinee and evening performances in Wood's Museum last week. On Friday evening and thereafter the programme was strengthened by the addition of "St. Mary's Eve."

THE INFLUX OF STRANGERS to the city last week on their way to or returning from the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, Pa., continued very large, and all of our places of amusement reaped a substantial benefit therefrom.

THE UNION-SQUARE THEATRE is to be opened for the regular season Oct. 2, when "The Two Orphans" will be revived. The following will be the changes in the cast: Picard, E. Lamb; Jacques Frochard, Frederick Robinson; Pierre Frochard, James O'Neil (his first appearance in New York); Marquis De Presles, Leonard Boyne, H. A. Doctor; Henriette, Miss Sarah Jewett; Marianne, Miss Girard; Florette, Miss Allen; Cora, Miss Cleves; and Sister Therese, Mrs. Seymour. "The Two Orphans" will be performed about six weeks, and then Miss Clara Morris will commence a limited engagement, starting in "Miss Multon," a French version of "East Lynne," in which the subject matter is treated in an entirely different and novel manner.

AT THE CHATEAU MABILLE VARIETIES the fresh arrivals the past week included Greacon and Arlington in Dutch and sharing; Miss Minnie Marks, who rode a horse divested of saddle and bridle; and Miss Sallie Marks, who is what is technically termed a scenic-rider. Mlle. Eva gave some entertaining performances on the tight-rope. Prof. Parker put his dogs through a number of feats, which greatly pleased the spectators. John H. Murray exhibited his trained horse. The corps of acrobats, gymnasts and leapers included Fred Runnells, Geo. Francis, Eugene Leach and James Donovan. Four clowns, at intervals, entertained the audiences with their gibes and jokes—Tom Barry, "Whimsical" Walker, William Marks and Charles H. Adams. Although the weather was not particularly favorable for canvas entertainments, the attendance was large.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, on Sept. 18, the reinforcements to the company included George W. Wood, who performed a bone-solo quite deftly, and subsequently sang Ethiopian melodies; Miss Ada Lynwood, a pleasing vocalist; Keating and Sands, who performed in a creditable manner upon a variety of musical instruments; Mons. and Mme. D'Omer, who gave a variety of difficult feats with swords, and wound up with a clever boxing match; and Charley Bender, who with a corked face sang comic songs. The entertainments in addition to these were furnished by George Dunbar and Natalio Lowande, who gave "La Perche Equipoise;" Bettie Remmelsburg and Antoinette Corsi, who were seen in a double dance; the Barlow Brothers in song-and-dance, and Lew Foster in a double Irish jig; the Foy Sisters in a musical sketch called "Love's Dawn," and Ida in her specialty of "Grimes' Cellar-door;" Hugh Fay in the chief character in a sketch called "The Irish Justice;" and the dramatic company in "Dick Turpin and Tom King."

AT THE COLUMBIA OPERA-HOUSE the company includes Belle Berry, the Ventini Troupe, Ada Freeman, the Monzert Sisters, Emma Lawrence, Winona Bridges, Mlle. Zulella, Marie Connolly, Lavenia, Nellie Pickett, Josie Willard, May Howes, Howard and Sanford, Bobby Daily, J. N. Stansill, J. H. Ryan, Delia Sheppard, E. L. Moore, and the Lawrence Sisters.

MRS. G. C. HOWARD'S COMBINATION in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" constituted the attraction at the Bowery Theatre the past week.

FRANK LEWIS and Quilter and Goldrich are to be added to the company at the Theatre Comique this week.

MESSRS. POOLE & DONNELLY, the new lessees and managers of the Grand Opera-house, open the regular Winter season on Oct. 16, giving dramatic and variety performances. Artists and combinations can arrange dates by addressing the managers as per card. The new lessees look for a liberal patronage as the consequence of the low rate of admission to be charged.

FREDERICK B. WARDE, W. E. Sheridan, and the Misses Gertrude Kellogg and Effie Elsler are to be in the cast of "King Lear" when that tragedy shall be produced at Booth's Theatre.

BELVIL RYAN is the star at the Bowery Theatre. He will act Nat Goslin in "The Flying Scud," which will be preceded by "The Irish Lion."

SIGNOR ERNI, Miss Emily Prior, and Miss Ida Hoyt are the fresh people this week at the Parisian Varieties.

THE PERTINENT INQUIRY among managers at the present time is "Who got the money for writing up 'Baba,'" the new spectacle at Niblo's Garden?

M. B. LEAVITT, manager Mme. Rentz's Minstrels, was in town Sept. 23. He states that business has been excellent.

THE HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITION at Gilmore's Garden, in conjunction with the excellent musical programmes, drew large audiences during the past week, the floral display fully meriting the approval it received, both from the rarity of the specimens exhibited and the exceeding beauty of the collection, undoubtedly one of the finest that have been brought together in this city. This week closes the concert season at this resort, a fitting termination being given to the engagement of the band by a farewell benefit to the leader, P. S. Gilmore, on the closing night, when a programme of more than ordinary attractiveness is offered.

SCANLON AND CRONIN, the Phoiten, Lulu Delmry the Snow Brothers, Griffin and Rice, the Parker Sisters, and J. H. Clifford are the newcomers at the Olympic Theatre Sept. 25.

"BRASS," with George Fawcett Rowe as Waifton Stray, was produced last week at Ford's Opera-house, Baltimore, Md., with the new company of that place of amusement in the cast. Our correspondent says, under date of Sept. 24: "The character of Waifton Stray as handled by Mr. Rowe was very funny. The piece brought out the capabilities of the members of the new company in a favorable way, and theatre-goers pronounce it the best that has been at the Opera-house in many years. Miss Nellie Cummings, the leading lady, while pretty in face and figure, does not appear to advantage in these essentials on the stage, but in the show what should be held better qualifications—experience in stage-business, a well-trained voice, great adaptability to difficult situation, and a vivacity of stage-address that should win popularity. Miss Kate Girard will do well in juvenile parts. Mrs. Germon, the old woman, needs no commendation. Miss Emma Markley, soubrette, appears something of a novice, but exhibits talent. Atkins Lawrence, a respectable heavy man, and E. A. Varrey in eccentric parts, give promise of doing good work. W. H. Burton, Geo. Streetson, C. L. Farwell, John Harbel, Walter Treville, Geo. Denham, Julian Mitchell, and H. E. Albaugh appeared very acceptably in their several parts. The piece was put on the stage elegantly, some of the sets including real exotic plants, statuary, bronzes and other accessories.....Ben De Bar has been engaged to appear some time during the season at this theatre as Falstaff.....'Humpty Dumpty" will be brought out Sept. 25 by Tyler's Combination."

MISS KATIE PUTNAM opened at the Opera-house, Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 18, in "The Old Curiosity Shop," appearing as Little Nell. The house was fair. Miss Putnam is a painstaking actress, and gave a very satisfactory performance. The support she received from the stock company was excellent. During the remainder of the week she appeared in her usual round of characters to moderate houses. On Sept. 25 C. W. Barry will commence a week's engagement, opening in "Echoes."..... J. C. Hall's Traveling Combination will open at Bridgeport, Ct., Oct. 2. The company will comprise C. C. Hall, general manager; F. D. Hall, business-manager; W. H. Strickland, agent; M. Lanagan, stage-manager; J. E. Hartell, leader of orchestra: Thomas J. Martin, M. Lanagan, Frederick Wren, E. L. Mortimer, F. E. Martin, Fred Hooker, Ed. M. Crane, G. W. Deyo, Mrs. M. Lanagan, Miss Isabella Preston, Miss Emma Reignolds and Miss Annie Moessten. E. T. Stetson will appear as the star on the opening night.

AT THE LELAND OPERA-HOUSE, Albany, N. Y., Miss Maggie Mitchell commenced an engagement of two weeks Sept. 18, owning with "Fanchon," which was acted to large houses. "Jane Eyre" on 21, and "Little Barefoot" filled out the week. Miss Mitchell's performance

MLLE. BELOCCA, Signor Brignoli and George A. Conly will give a couple of concerts at Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, on the evenings of Sept. 29 and 30.

BELOCCA, the Russian prima donna, is to sing in the Academy of Music, Baltimore, Md., Sept. 26, for the benefit of the Savannah sufferers.

"EVANGELINE," an opera bouffe, will be produced at Ford's Opera-house, Baltimore, Md., for one week from Oct. 2, with Miss Annie Montague, a young Baltimorean, formerly of the Kellogg Opera Troupe, as the Belle of Arcadia, and Miss Kitty Blanchard as Gabriel.

"THE DONEGAN LIGHT GUARD," "Awfully Fly," and other recent songs are published by E. Harding in cheap form. See card.

E. S. BENGAN, cornet-player and leader, can be engaged by applying to advertised address.

A SET OF EVRIN BELLS is wanted by C. P. Irving, whose address find in our business department.

W. HOWARD, slide trombone and baritone player, advertises for an engagement.

THE NEW EAGLE HALL, Dover, N. H., was dedicated Sept. 11 by a concert by the Dover Cornet Band, speeches, etc. A ball was given 12, and Mme. Zittella's Female Minstrels performed 13, 14.

A BAND TEACHER offers his services as instructor to a brass band. See card.

THE KELLY VOCALIST desires an engagement with a concert troupe. See Miss L. Ashton's card.

BOGAN'S banjos and instruction are advertised with prices in another column.

MAX STRAKOSCH'S short season of Italian opera at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, was brought to a conclusion on the evening of the 19th inst., by the production of the opera of "Semiramide" for the first time in that city, as announced. The largest audience of the season was present on this occasion. At the performance on the 18th inst. "Il Trovatore" had been repeated to a fair audience.

THE CENTENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, under the musical direction of Theodore Thomas, was inaugurated on the 20th inst., in the presence of a very large audience. The festival consists of ten concerts, concluding Sept. 30. The attendance fell off materially after the first night. It looks as though Theodore had lost his hold in that city.

SPAULDING'S BELLRINGERS gave a concert in Portland, Me., last week, and local journals thus eulogize their performance:

THE SPAULDING TROUPE.—A large audience greeted the Swiss Bellringers at City Hall yesterday evening, and the concert was an immense success, the elite and fashion of Portland being fully represented. Music, mirth and harmony reigned supreme—the entertainment being delightful. Georgie Deane Spaulding's harp playing was specially delicate and artistic. We have attended the concerts of other bellringing troupes, but are free to confess that the Spaulding troupe carry off the palm. Besides their superb performance upon the Swiss bells, they are likewise great instrumentalists upon the harp. Mr. Wm. F. Spaulding performed upon the harp in a highly artistic manner, whilst his bass-bell solos were the wonder and delight of all. Everybody should hear them, as it is a rare combination of musical talent.—Portland Press.

THE BELLRINGERS.—The entertainment given at the City Hall last evening by the Swiss Bellringers, was, as those concerts always are, very fine indeed. There was a large audience in attendance, which was not at all chary of applause. The performance opened with a medley overture airs by the company upon the bells, followed by comic songs by Mr. Oscar Schaffer, who not only possesses a fine voice, but is also a first-rate actor. Miss Georgie Deane Spaulding's fantasie upon the harp was charming, and received an encore. Her cornet solo was a splendid performance. The duet between Little Kittie and Willie, in which "On Board the Mary Jane" was introduced, was greeted with considerable favor. The solo upon the musical glasses by Mrs. Louise Schaffer was very beautiful. In fact, the entire performance was one of the most satisfactory in every respect that have been given in this city for a long time.—Portland Argus.

The company is engaged to return to Gloucester, Mass., and Portland, Me., in January, under the auspices of the People's Lecture Course.

VARIETY HALLS.

In Memoriam.

GEORGE H. MELVILLE.

BY TWO FRIENDS.

"He is not dead; he only sleeps
To wake more fair in heaven."

Mourner, arrest that falling tear;
'Tis arrogance in Heaven's sight
To weep for one that love sent here,
And lifted up to endless light.
Thus nature must uphold her cause,
Though we rebel against her laws.

Why should'st thou grieve, or even dew
Thy George's grave with sorrow's test.
When but the mortal's dust you view
That found an absent angel's crest?
The spark that gives thy pity bent
Burns brighter in God's firmament.

Yet from the fount that bathes the light
Of vision 'neath thy pallid brow,
Upon the grave which seals his blight
Thou may'st shed its waters now;
It were not lavished, for thine eyes
Have lost their military prize.

The Saviour could, with diamonds bright,
Have decked poor George's lonely grave;
Yet He, in wisdom's holier light,
Preferred the tribute tears he gave,
And shed them o'er the friend he loved
Till life was by his pity moved.

Oh, Vinee, with all thy glowing love,
The beautiful star-studded sky,
And think beyond where planets move
The treasure of thy heart is nigh;
For each of those bright stars that shine
Shall perish ere that friend of thine.

And though the light of heaven dethrone
The pallid empress of the night,
Faith's deathless vision may be thrown
Beyond the glorious arch of light,
Till, kneeling by his angel's tread,
It views thy absent friend with God.

New Orleans, Sept. 4, 1876.

THE NEW METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Louisville, Ky., was opened Sept. 16, and it can safely be said that no larger audience was seldom before crowded into so small a space, wrote our correspondent on Sept. 21, continuing: "Long before the doors were opened the street in front of the theatre was so crowded that vehicles could not pass, and one half hour before the performance commenced the box-office was closed, and no more tickets were sold. Inside the theatre every inch of seating and standing room was fully occupied, the people crowding over into the space allotted to the orchestra until the musicians were unable to play, and they were obliged to seek refuge on the stage. The performance commenced with a minstrel first-part, in which Ed. Chrissie and Billy Wylie figured, the latter as one of the ends. The Morosco Family gave an exhibition of their acrobatic feats, and were repeatedly encored. Their acts are new here, and were finely performed. 'Young America' Morosco gave a fair exhibition on a slack-wire. Miss Fanny Florence sang several serio-comic songs, but, although she possesses a pretty face and is a good dresser, she is hardly up to the standard as a vocalist. Homer and Holly, in songs-and-dances, soon won the favor of the audience, and they were called upon to repeat their acts until they were actually tired out. Miss Nellie Taylor sang several ballads, and was justly encored. Ed. Chrissie, a good comedian, greatly pleased the audience by his comicalities. Miss Nelly Howard appeared in a artistic and well-executed jig, and Mlle. Estelle appeared to advantage in a serio-comic vocalism. The hit of the evening was made by the Claire Sisters in their contortion and gymnastic acts; they received recall after recall. The performance terminated with the farce 'Paddy Miles' Boy,' with Ed. Chrissie in the title-role. The entertainment throughout was excellent. Both credit and praise should be given to Fred Harris, the stage-manager, for the manner in which the stage was run on the opening night. Instead of the band playing on the stage in addition to the performance, Manager Wharfe has provided a handsome band wagon, and they now play through the principal streets. In addition to the present company, all of whom remain, the following new people are billed for 25th: Eddie D. Esmond, H. S. Hodges, Julia Bliss, Josie Farron, and Admiral and Lulu Yale."

MANAGER FLYNNE of the St. Charles Theatre, New Orleans, La., announces that, in consequence of political troubles in that city, he will defer the opening of that house until Oct. 31. He publishes an explanatory card in this issue of THE CLIPPER, to which the attention of those who have dates at this theatre is especially directed.

HARLAN WARSOUR and Charles T. Ellis perform in their German specialties at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., this week. They advertise their first open date as Nov. 13.

ARTISTS OF ABILITY, ladies especially, are wanted at McDaniel's New Variety Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyoming Terr.

THE BENNETTS.—Frank and Eva—are now performing in their specialties at the Coliseum, Chicago, Ill. They announce their first open date as Oct. 16.

WARD'S OPERA-HOUSE, Fall River, Mass., will open Oct. 9 for the season, and Manager Ward requests artists desiring dates to address him as per card. A first-class straight-man is wanted.

M. LE FOWLER, trapeze performer, etc., advertises for an engagement.

WILLIAM COURTNEY'S IRIS is at present performing in Maguire & Haverly's Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.

BILLY PEEL joined James Heywood's Combination in Lynn, Mass., Sept. 16. The troupe is to perform in Portland, Me., Sept. 25, Saco 26, Orone 27, Bangor 28.

HARRY FENNER, Dutch song-and-dance performer, died at the residence of his father, in Baltimore, Md., at 4 o'clock P. M., Sept. 21. He had been connected with the variety profession during the past three years, and was a favorite in public and private life.

J. H. CLIFFORD, Ethiopian jig-dancer, opened at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 11, and will close at the Olympic Theatre, this city, Oct. 7, after which he can be engaged to appear in his imitations of celebrated jig-dancers. See card for particulars.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Lonaconing, Md., song-and-dance ladies, serio-comic vocalists, fancy dancers and a good straight-man are wanted. See J. J. Jones' advertisement.

AT THE METROPOLITAN, Indianapolis, Ind., Miss Nully Pieris constituted the only arrival Sept. 18, Miss Fredericks falling to come, on account of sickness. All the favorites of last week were retained, however, and rendered a delightful bill. For Sept. 25 the New York Living Art Statue Troupe (a la Matt Morgan), twenty in number, Gibson and Binny, Prof. Emil Gorgux, Mlle. Adeline, and Sam Martin are billed. Departing 23 were Josie Farron, Jennie Eagan, Laura Bliss, Billy Wylie and B. S. Hodges, all to the New Metropolitan, at Louisville; the D'Alves Sisters, to Toledo; and Taylor, Green and Taylor and the Martinetti Bros., destination unknown.

IONE LANG and Bella Bent closed their engagements at Tooker's Varieties, Norfolk, Va., Sept. 22, going to New York.

JENNIE KATHARINE, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Hill (the latter professionally known as Maggie Mortimer), died of brain-fever in St. Martinsville, La., July 30, after an illness of only twenty-four hours. Information of this has just been sent us.

MRS. MUNROE, widow of the late Harry Munroe, mystic-change artist, is requested to send her address to Miss Duckett, care of this office.

WASH. NORTON in his character-change act, in which he makes all the necessary changes in the presence of the audience, has been fulfilling a successful engagement as an uptown theatre. He opens at the Grand Central Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 2, and can be addressed as per card for dates.

ETHELINE SISTERS, double-jig, clog and specialty artists, can be engaged. See advertisement.

VARIETY ARTISTS are wanted at Gilmore's Garden, Rochester, N. Y. See advertisement.

THE DUPONTS—George and Willard—gymnasts, announce their first open date as Jan. 1, 1877. Managers can address them care of this office.

LADY COMIC AND SENTIMENTAL VOCALIST, a character singer, and performers with specialties are wanted at Harry Hill's Theatre, as per card.

AT WARD'S OPERA-HOUSE, Newark, N. J., the same company was presented Sept. 18, 19, including the Watson Brothers in an act on the horizontal bar, and as grotesque clowns; Fanny Sherrello, ballad-and-dance vocalisms; the St. Felix Troupe, in a song-and-dances quartet; John Purdy in character comic songs, and a play entitled "Something That's Never Been Done," which met with much approbation; Tierney and Cronin in their specialty of "When the Band Begins to Play;" Frank Raymond in Dutch songs and sayings; Govan in imitations of different actors and actresses, the imitation of Stuart Robson being particularly noticeable; and Fanny Knight in serio-comic songs. Rachel Alexander failed to appear. Business was excellent the past week. Departures 23: Frank Raymond, the Watson Brothers, Tierney and Cronin, to New York; Fanny Knight, destination not known. To open 25: The Victorelli Brothers—John and William—Morton and Ryan, Jennie Wade and St. Leon.....At the Metropolitan business continues good. The new faces were Buckley and Turner, Christine Percy, J. D. Griffin, the Gorman Brothers, Signor Pabea and Mlle. Faltonp, Dolly Brothport, Clara St. Clair and Harry Hall. Advices of Sept. 23.

THE ANGIE SCHOTT TROUPE have been playing to moderately good houses during the week at the Adelphi, Toledo, O. Miss Anna Morgan has become a great favorite. Fannie Kent and Chas. La Hogue are old acquaintances. Murray and Neary in Irish acts were fair. Miss Schott's "Masks and Faces" were cleverly done, and her illusion act is fine. They go to Cleveland 25 for one week.....At the Comique, Sept. 18, the new people were J. H. Graham and Miss Jennie Wade. Jennie Willis was to have appeared, but, not having fully recovered from her illness, was taken down again. Closing are Dan Tracy and Alice McGowan and the Willis Sisters (if able), to Cincinnati. Opening 25: Joe Mack, Agnes May, Ella Davis, Della Ferguson, Huber and Glidden, Sullivan and Green, Searles and Beggs, and the De Alve Sisters. Letter of Sept. 22.

THE ATTENDANCE continued unusually large at the Comique, Providence, R. I. The new arrivals Sept. 18 were Mose Fiske, who appeared in his specialty 'Sam Sammy;" Neoskeleeta the Indian maiden in characteristic songs; Ida Collom, one of the best vocalists that have appeared here; Andy Collom, an excellent banjo-player; the Hennesy Brothers in songs and dances; Matt Greene, contortionist; Carrie Monroe and Fanny Miller, vocalists. The departures 23 were Joe Pastor and Matt Greene. Same company remains next (this) week. Tony Pastor's Troupe appeared at the Academy of Music 23 to a good house. Advices of Sept. 24.

THE COMPANY at the Comique, Williamsburg, L. I., this week will include Adele Leonard, M. Le Fowler, Athegan and Adams, the Carroll Family, Jennie Lindsay, Carrie Wilson, Dot Aborn, Annie Hart, Dora Steele, Minnie De Witt, F. M. Wills, John Delfield, J. J. Riely.

THE TIVOLI Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., was opened for the season Sept. 18 with the following company: Con. T. Murphy, the Carrera Sisters, Chas. Mulgro, Barry Maxwell, Master Eddie, the Haley Brothers, Celia Clinton, Burt Clark and Prof. Laiedl and son.

BILLY WILDE, Irish comedian, appeared for a week at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., commences an engagement at Trimble's Varieties, Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 9.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Trenton, N. J., will be opened for the season Oct. 2. Variety performers and a leader of orchestra are advertised for.

SPECIALTY ARTISTS, combinations, and sensational stars desiring engagements at the Academy of Music, Chicago, Ill., can address Manager Fred Aims, as per advertisement.

THE NEW PEOPLE at Smith's Opera-house, Grand Rapids, Mich., Sept. 18 were Ada Howard and Harry Clark, who as a comedian at once installed himself as a favorite. Joe Mack made a hit in his bone and drum solos. The departures 23 were Joe Mack and Agnes May, Ella Davis, Della Ferguson, Huber and Jones, Glenn and Williams, and Fostelle are announced for 25. The Simpson Sisters and Alice McGowan disappointed the manager, giving no reason. Business fair.

ARTISTES OF ABILITY, especially ladies, are wanted at Enochs' Varieties, Philadelphia, Pa. See card.

THE LEONARDS—Walla and Nellie—can be engaged for their aquatic specialties through their agents, Messrs. Sleeper & Thompson of Philadelphia.

MR. MORGAN'S NOVELTY COMPANY will commence a Fall and Winter traveling season at the Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C., Oct. 2. D. B. Hodges is the general agent. Further particulars are published in our business department.

MANAGERS desiring to engage a variety company, with a new and attractive specialty, are referred to an advertisement head "A New Era."

FIRST-CLASS PERFORMERS desiring engagements at the Tivoli Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., are requested to address Con T. Murphy, business and stage manager.

AT THE NATIONAL THEATRE, Laramie City, Wy. T., the company the past week included Annie and Jennie Gilroy, Flora Mills as "Mazeppa," Jo Hoyt, Willie Gill and Eugene Holman.

MLLE. NINON DUCLOS' TROUPE will open at the Assembly Buildings, Philadelphia, on Sept. 25.

PROF. J. LAWRENCE and his living statuary are the feature at Enochs' Varieties, Philadelphia, Pa. Business has been very good.

MAYOR STOKLEY of Philadelphia has issued an order to the proprietors of the various variety theatres in that city restraining them from the production of the cancan, and deterring them, on penalty of suppression, from placing other alleged "indecent" acts on their programmes. The order has accordingly been withdrawn from Enochs' Varieties, the Parisian Varieties and the Washington Garden, where it had been a decided feature.

SEVERAL VARIETY SHOWS in the vicinity of the Centennial Exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., were declosed on the evening of the 21st inst. by order of Mayor Stokley, on account of frame buildings being erected for their occupancy, contrary to law.

THE GRAND CENTRAL VARIETY THEATRE, Philadelphia, was crowded nightly during the week ending Sept. 23, an entire change of programme being then presented. The new faces were Miss Clara Moore in her capital vocalisms; the Empire Children in a clever violin duet; Harry Bryant in his well-known eccentricities; Miss Helen Revere in a jig, well executed; Gibson and Binney in a neat clog-dance; and John Le Clair in feats of balancing, one and all meeting with a hearty welcome. Andy Hughes was the cause of considerable merriment in the Beauties of 'Ambition" and "Our Boys." Miss Martha Wren appeared to advantage in the concluding drama of "Life in the South." The new appearances on the 25th inst. will be Ira A. Payne, the Parkers, and Frank George.

AT POONAN'S VARIETIES, Philadelphia, Miss Nellie Edwards and the Cushing Sisters were the new arrivals last week, the attendance continuing large. Performers with specialties can always find an engagement here.

AT THE NOVELTY THEATRE, Brooklyn, L. I., the programme for the week ending Sept. 23 opened with the farce, "A Henpecked Husband," followed by Lulu Delmay, who rendered several serio-comic songs with much vivacity. Griffin and Lee were seen in song-and-dances, which they failed to give with the customary looked-for finish. Bob Hart discoursed upon the probable effect of the dynamite explosion at Hell Gate. Scanlon and Cronin, on the first three nights of the week, appeared in a sketch, "Wanted, a Lodger, or the New York Policeman," which on Thursday and the subsequent performances was displaced for the reproduction of their specialty "Life in a Tenement-house." In the latter, the part of the daughter, as enacted by a very young girl, Miss Ida Forrest, proved to be a strong feature of the act. The Parker Sisters gave songs-and-dances; George Wood, solos upon the bones and tambourine; Dudley Davis, his sleights and witticisms; followed by the Orrin Brothers in a grotesque act of parlor gymnastics, which they brought to a conclusion with their feats of head to-head balancing. The bill concluded with the two-act drama, "Nobody's Child." The Theatre offered during the past week May Marshall, Belle La Verde and Frank Lewis in serio-comic songs, Lillie and Minnie La Verde in "Love at First Sight," Gaynor and Mudge in a musical melange, Frank Carleton in specialties, Harry and Jack Noon as the "Biffs and Bangs," Eurardo in a trapeze act completing the programme, which commenced with "Troubles of a Wig-maker," and terminated with a drama, in a prologue and three acts, entitled "I. O. U., or Dot's Last Leap of the Maniac."

AT SHELBY'S, Buffalo, N. Y., the fresh arrivals on Sept. 18 were Josephine Stanley, Mlle. Le Fevre, Mons. Laiscelle and Tommy Fish. Those closing 23 were the three Turners, to Chicago, Ill.; Tommy Fish, to New York, and the Mayo, to St. Louis, Mo. Billed for 25: Mlle. Larkelle, Kirk and Drew, and Keating and Sands.

T. W. HENNESSEY of Hennessey Brothers was presented by his wife, in St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 22, with a son.

ANGIE SCHOTT'S COMBINATION is to perform this week in the Academy of Music, Cleveland, O.

AT NEWTON'S VARIETIES, Hartford, Ct., a good business was done the past week, the fresh attractions being Alice Gleason and Chace and Davis. Closing 23: Mabel Pearl, to Providence; Alice Somers, to New Haven: the Kine Brothers and Fred Sharpley, to New York. The new people 25 are Healey, Conway and Ella Saunders, Lizzie Carleton, the King Cole Family, and Sharpley Brothers.....Tony Pastor is billed to occupy Roberts' Opera-house Sept. 26.

THE NEW FACES at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., the past week were Harry Woodson in negro specialties, Den Howe in "The Dutch Bootblack," and Charles Diamond in clog-dances and harp solos. Business fair. Departures 23: Charles Diamond, to Cincinnati; Cummings, Hines and Kitty Durand, to Akron; Searle, Beggs and Master Haney, to Toledo; Henry and Lizzie Howd and Emily and Fred Siegel. The arrivals for 25 are Sallie Mason, the Hassan Sisters, Thomas and Heeney, Amelia Dean, Harry Morris and Billie Wyle.

DR. R. B. PACHELLI, of the Amazon Garden, Philadelphia, which was destroyed by fire Sept. 9, writes us that his losses were not so great as they were reported to us, and published in our issue of Sept. 16. He states that everything in the shape of scenery and wardrobe was saved. Mr. Blanchett had an insurance of $4,000 upon the building and fixtures, which will nearly cover the loss sustained.

MME. NINON DUCLOS states that her troupe succeeded in saving all their wardrobe from the late destructive fire at Blanchett's Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

WALLEY AND WIMER, character sketch artists, vocalists and comedians, can be engaged after Oct. 25. Address as per advertisement.

A YOUNG LADY of slim figure is wanted to learn a new act. See G. M.'s card.

W. NAILOR, whose address find in another column, wants to engage two sketch artists—man and wife preferred—and a lady serio-comic, who can also sing ballads.

MISS ADELAIDE MILLER, wife of Manager Miller of the Grand Central Theatre, Troy, N. Y., sailed for Europe Sept. 23, to procure talent for the opening of the house on her return.

LOUISE FRANKLIN, balladist and operatic vocalist, having concluded her engagement at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., is prepared to arrange for dates through her agent, Col. T. Allston Brown. The Boston press speaks in complimentary terms in regard to her singing.

PROF. NEIL SMITH and his school of trained dogs are now performing at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. His first open date is Nov. 27. See advertisement.

THE ATTENDANCE at the Winter Garden, Philadelphia, continues very good. The new arrivals on the 18th inst. were Master John F. Rhodes, violinist; Kearney and Moran, Irish songs-and-dance; George Volna, contortionist; and Miss Mamie French, serio-comic vocalist. Miss Maggie Bowers, Miss Lizzie Richmond, John Goodman and John Bucklin open here on the 25th inst.

CHARLEY GARDNER, the original "Hop Light Loo," song-and-dance man, has been doing the Centennial during the past two months, and visiting his many friends in Philadelphia.

THE WASHINGTON GARDEN, Philadelphia, has been doing a good business during the past week. Dr. A. B. Kennedy is now the business-manager here. The Morrison Sisters, Harry Clifton, Annie Worland, Stewart W. Davis, Harry Magill and Mlle. Octavia open September 25.

AT THE COLISEUM, Chicago, Ill., an excellent business has been done, the performances of the Gangero Troupe of Japs, the Bennetts in their original sketch "The Kitchen Domestics," and the singing of Maggie Gray being the especial features of interest. The Japs leave for Milwaukee, and Charles Harris and Lotta Gray go to Cincinnati. The fresh appearances Sept. 25 are the original Peak Family of Swiss Bellringers, seven in number; the three Turner Brothers in songs-and-dances and banjo-solos; the Victorellis, gymnasts; Frank B. Converse, banjoist; Burton Stanley, male soprano; Annie Bradshaw and Flora Marcy. The Bennetts and Maggie Gray remain for another week.....Large numbers have frequented the Adelphi the past week, the Boissets, Phoites and others having presented a sterling entertainment. The departures are the Phoites, Jem and Nellie Mace, and Tommy Granger, to New York; Nellie St. John, to Pittsburg; Cincinnatus, probably to St. Louis; Iben Gilfoil, to Haverly's Theatre; and La Petite Rosa remains in town. Next (this) week "The Black Crook" will be brought out, with Bidwell & McDonough's scenery, costumes and paraphernalia. The fresh list of specialty artists includes the Herd Sisters, Huber and Glidden, Leslie and Avery, the Boissets, Blanche Selwyn, Little Ardine and the rest remaining; and a mammoth ballet troupe, under the conductorship of Mons. Baptistine, and led by Betty Rammelsburg, Ida Devere and Antoinette Cornet as premieres, and Frankie Christie, the Carle Sisters and Estelle and Celestine as seconds, has been secured. For the rendering of the dramatic portion of the spectacle D. L. Morris has been engaged for Prof. Rice and Maud Hilton for Rialeta .... In order to secure some special and novel attractions, Manager Aims has postponed the opening of the Academy till Oct. 2. Letter of Sept. 22.

A BILL of more than ordinary excellence was presented at Barton's Opera-house, Syracuse, N. Y., the past week, and there was a decided improvement in the attendance. Miss Addie Stanwood, a pleasing balladist, was well appreciated, her voice being clear and powerful. Mr. Conway Wilson, the eccentric Rob Blavin in his banjo specialties was excellent. Gilday and Gialvan in their new version of "Ar de News" were well appreciated. Bryan O'Lynn, Irish change artist, was fine. Stewart and Siavin created considerable fun in their act "No Hans Done." Delahanty and Cummings are well known to the CLIPPER'S readers. They are re-engaged for another week. John A. Toole, stage-manager, has proved quite an acquisition. On Friday evening Miss Susie Linden (wife of Frank Wild) received a benefit, of which she was well deserving. Howard and Hayden failed to appear Sept. 18. Bryan O'Lynn has organized the following company, to open in Watertoo, N. Y., Oct. 2: Bryan O'Lynn; P. Lehman, manager; Jas. Mouhon, Miss Rhoda O'Brien, Miss Katie Magee, Russell and Stearns, McCarthy and Dansell, Max Fechter, James Hart, Fred Witham and Charles Hoxley. Advices of Sept. 24.

THE SUMMER THEATRE COMIQUE, Washington, D. C., did an immense business during the past week, the inclement weather seemingly having no effect upon the attendance. The new arrivals Sept. 18 were Ira A. Paine in illustrations of the art of pigeon-shooting, W. H. Bray in Dutch songs-and-dances, Miss Lillie Ellis in serio-comic songs, and the Seymour Combination in the sensational play of "Sitting Bull, or Custer's Last Charge." The departures Sept. 23 were Emma Brotto, to Galveston, Texas; Lizzie Mulvey, to the Metropolitan, Newark, N. J.; the Snow Brothers, to the Olympic, New York; Ira A. Paine, to the Grand Central, Philadelphia; and the Seymours, to New York. The announcements for Sept. 25 are Sam E. Ryan in the burlesque of "The Two Orphans," the Irwin Sisters, Harper and Stansill, and Jessie Merton. The Summer Theatre closes Sept. 30. The theatre proper will be opened Oct. 2 by Matt Morgan's New York Combination. The regular season commences Oct. 9. Letter of Sept. 24.

THE SHENOWAS, a dramatic Irish drama, was the leading feature during the past week of the inaugural programme of the Holliday-street Novelty Theatre, Baltimore, Md. Our correspondent, writing on Sept. 22, says: "The opening of the Holliday-street Theatre for novelty performances by W. J. Gilmore, who has leased it for a term of years, promises to revolutionize the amusements here. A series of low prices has been adopted, and during this week the theatre has been crowded from pit to dome with very respectable audiences, composed largely of laboring men and mechanics, with their families. The orchestra—a very good one, by the way—plays popular melodies and national airs, which has proved an excellent feature. W. J. Collins, who sustains the leading part in 'The Shinghawn,' is the stage-manager, and appears well up in that line. The company is decidedly better than many our correspondent has seen in the theatres of late. Miss Minnie Z. Mortimer, Miss Oliver, Jennie Christie, C. Flemming, G. W. Mitchell, C. Norris, J. Ferris, George France, C. Miller and John Ferris. Clark Gibbs appeared in negro specialties. The specialties and sketches are John Williams, Seamon and Somers, and the Richmond Sisters in songs-and-dances; John Rielly, Gorman and Romer, Jennie Engle and Frank Cushman, original vocalists; Little Todd in gymnastics; and Signor Giovanni with his silver-toned glasses. This week Kate Raymond will appear in 'The Miseries of New York".....At the New Central Theatre the attractions will be Mme. Rentz's Female Minstrels, and Mabel Santley's Burlesque Troupe in 'Ixion,' and the ever popular 'Living Statues.'"

CINCINNATI, O., VARIETY NEWS to 23d is furnished by our correspondent as follows: "At the National Theatre Comique the new appearances for the week have been Ida Rachel in fancy dances; Miss Lilly Vane, a fair ballad-ist; the Mendals in Dutch specialties; Clara Stanley, in serio-comic songs, and Billy Bryant in his 'Musical Moke' act. All have taken well; and, in addition to the above, Redmond and Devere have appeared in songs-and-dances, Lynch and Manning in their Irish sketch, 'Taking Out Naturals,' Carlisle in serio-comic vocalisms. An exhibition of living statues has also been presented, and has served to draw big houses for the week. Departures on the 23d: Redmond and Devere and Ida Carlisle, to New Orleans; Clara Stanley, to Heuck's Hall, this city. Lynch and Manning have dissolved partnership, Lynch going to Chicago and Manning remaining. To appear on the 25th: Conners and Kelly, Alice May, Chas. Diamond, James E. Jackson, the Willis Sisters, Agnes Sutherland, James Carr and Charley Norman. Active preparations are being made for presenting a grand female-minstrel scene, new scenery having been painted and an extra corps of ladies employed.

MAY LINDEN, serio-comic, a handsome blonde and fine dresser, made her first appearance in Richmond, Va., at the Theatre Comique, Sept. 18, and was enthusiastically received. Lee Hamilton, Dutch and Ethiopian comedian, opened the same date, and proved to be a good card. La Petite Estelle comes in for a deserved share of the applause. The Misses Davenport and Howard remain popular as ever. Charles Morris shows a decided improvement since his last appearance. Charles Crowell now officiates as stage-manager and interlocutor, and does well. Manager Putnam has opened the Manor House as a boarding-place for performers, with a fine bar and restaurant attached. Miss Edna Wellington, late of the Comique, now lies seriously ill. Letter of Sept. 24.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS (recently organized) gave their initial performance of the season at the Opera-house, Newark, N. J., Sept. 21 to moderately fair business. The company is good in all its appointments, having material of the finest kind to make it one of the best traveling companies on the road. In the first-part Lew Benedict, who occupied his old position of tambo, was well supported by Charley Lord as bones, and the position of interrogator was managed by Theodore Jackson. The quintet is excellent, and the selection of ballads by J. A. Barney, John Stout and T. B. Dixon gave satisfaction. In the olio, Charles E. Dobson gave some of the finest solos and variations on the banjo we have ever heard in this city; Hogan and Lord in their sketch "Our Sunny Southern Home" were very funny; Lew Benedict gave a stump-speech and was encored; Adams and Lee gave duets on various kinds of instruments; John Hogan did a good song-and-dance; the whole concluding with the farce of "The Coming Man." Letter of Sept. 23.

JOSEPH E. CHEEVERS, the song-and-dance man, had a hearing Sept. 23 before Judge Elcock, Philadelphia, on a writ of habeas corpus, on the charge of having appropriated $300, the property of a Miss Fox, mentioned in our last issue. Miss Hill, on being cross-examined, freely admitted that she and Cheevers had been living as man and wife, and that the $300 had been obtained from her by Cheevers to open a cigar-store. Judge Elcock did not see enough in the case to justify it being sent before a jury, and Mr. Cheevers was consequently acquitted.

LEW BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS will commence a short season at Concert Hall, Philadelphia, on the 25th of September. Joseph E. Jackson is the business-manager, and Tom Moulton the general-agent and treasurer of this new organization.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS, Philadelphia, attracted large audiences during the week ending Sept. 23, the burlesque of "Our Boys" still remaining a strong feature of the programme.

SIMMONS, SLOCUM & SWEATNAM'S MINSTRELS were successful in drawing large audiences last week at their Opera-house, Philadelphia. The novel feature was the concluding burlesque of "The Countryman's Visit to the Centennial."

DICK LITTLE, a colored performer formerly connected with the troupe at Casey's, on Eighth street, below Vine, Philadelphia, is said to have committed suicide by drowning himself in the Delaware, at Camden, N. J., about three weeks ago. We shall be pleased to hear that our information was incorrect, and that Little still lives.

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS, under the management of Harry J. Clapham, are to commence a week's engagement in Bidwell's Academy of Music, New Orleans, La., Oct. 1. Ed. Tinkham joined the troupe as general agent in Baltimore Aug. 20, and George Clapham as press-agent.

J. W. MORROW is now performing at Kelly & Leon's Minstrels, this city.

CALLENDER'S GEORGIA MINSTRELS are to perform in Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 5, 6, 7.

MME. RENTZ' MINSTRELS open at the New Central Theatre, Baltimore, Md., one week, commencing 25. On the 30th inst. the Minstrels are billed to perform in Grand Rapids, Mich., Sept. 28, 29, Grand Haven 30, Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 2, 3, thence to Madison and St. Paul, Minn.

WINE BUSINESS has been done by Haverly's Minstrels, Chicago, Ill., and an excellent programme has been presented. The novelty of the week has been an exceedingly clever travesty of our local sign-difficulty, from the pen of the manager, Will. E. Chapman, entitled "The Sign-board Demolisher, or the Ambitious Mayor." Its only fault is its somewhat abrupt termination. It was given in white faces, with the exception of Ben Cotton. The drama of "Life on the Mississippi" will be the fresh feature next (this) week, and Ben Gilfoil is put in as a first appearance here. Schoolcraft and Coes have gone to Boston for four weeks, returning here again. .....An excellent attendance has rewarded an exceptionally fine bill at Hooley's the past week. Sheridan and Mack made a hit. They continue another week. Baker and Doyle continue in songs-and-dances, Sam Cole will give his banjo-solos, and Messrs. Hart, Rice, Robinson and the rest of the company will appear in a burlesque of "The Black Crook," introducing the Peruvian Ballet Troupe. Advices of Sept. 22.

AT THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE, Indianapolis, Ind., Callender's Georgia Minstrels occupied the boards the past week to fair business.

CHARLES B. HICKS was to have joined the Georgia Minstrels as stage-manager and interlocutor at Geneseo, Ill., Sept. 25.

CIRCUSES.

COOPER, BAILEY & CO.'S INTERNATIONAL CIRCUS per formed in Gilroy, Cal., Sept. 18, Salinas 19, Watsonville 20, Hollister 21, Livermore 22, San Barnardino 23, and is billed in Manchime 25, Los Angeles 27, 28, Bakersfield 29, Mercer 30, Sacramento Oct. 2. They are to close their season about the middle of October, and ship to Australia Nov. 11, taking out nine cages of animals, six elephants and about thirty horses. The remainder of the stock, etc., will be sold in California.

ACCIDENT TO A CLOWN.—While William Ashton, clown with W. W. Cole's Circus, was holding some ladders used by the Leroy Brothers in the performance of gymnastic feats in Lexington, Ky., Sept. 18, the ladders fell and badly fractured one of Mr. Ashton's ankles. He was kindly cared for by Mr. Cole and the various members of the company. Mr. Ashton will be compelled to remain in Lexington for some time.

THE LONDON PAVILION SHOW exhibited in Sperryville, Va., Sept. 18, Luray 19, New Market 20, Timberville 21, Harrisonburg 22, Port Republic 23, Madison C. H. 25. J. D. Clark is the general agent, and G. C. Cortright assistant.

THE WALHALLA BROTHERS—Edward and John—and J. S. Leopold are engaged to Cooper, Bailey & Co., for Australia.

FOREPAUGH'S AGGREGATION performed to a good business on the old baseball grounds adjoining Lincoln Park, Cincinnati, O., Sept. 18, 19, 20, 21. A serious accident occasioned on the second afternoon by the escape of a lion from his cage just as the audience had started to depart. He was caged again by the attendants without damage.

W. W. COLE'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE are to show in Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 5, 6, 7.

GIFF SNOWDEN and dealers in cheap jewelry are reminded that the Steinau Jewelry Co. of Cincinnati, O., have removed to No. 70 Fourth street. See card.

P. T. BARNUM'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE gave four exhibitions in Richmond, Va., Sept. 18, 19, and proved in all respects to be a great show. The street parade was unequaled. The tents were literally packed at each performance, hundreds having been turned away. The company left for Petersburg 20, thence to Fredericksburg, Washington and Baltimore.

A TURN, which is supposed to have escaped some time ago from Van Amburgh & Co.'s Menagerie, has been making raids upon the farms in the neighborhood of Hamesport, N. J. Various animals had been missed, and several of the farmers kept watch on Sept. 19 and 20 in order to capture the thief. About half-past eleven o'clock at night, the animal was seen to approach a farm-yard; but it was not until it was within ten feet of the watchers, and escape was impossible, that they discovered it to be a tiger. Two of the watchers fired, and it was seen that a ball had taken effect in the tiger's thigh. With a loud growl the beast turned upon them, and, leaping the farm-yard fence

THE ADELPHI THEATRE.—At this popular resort the audience was so large as to completely fill the house. The programme of the evening included several novelties, and the performance was evidently relished. The living statues of Jem Mace were notable for a skill in figure-posturing that few can equal. With a splendid physique and an accurate knowledge of how best to show it off to advantage, his figure positions in his representations of ancient and modern statuary were very effective, and the grace, skill and superb muscular development which contributed to these illustrations repeatedly won the applause of the large audience present.—CHICAGO TIMES, Sept. 12.
